What do you see as the main problems confronting the new pope?

ST. AGNES

PATTY RINEHART Sophomore
class president

"He'll have to try and restore faith and will have to try and strengthen the family unit. He'll have to have quick and definite answers to such moral questions as abortion, divorce and women's ordination. The pope should be a mixture of conservatism and liberalism because he'll have to stay with the moral values yet realize it's a changing society."

JILL LEVESQUE
soccer team

"He has to begin fresh and act quickly to arrange the church's affairs because the last pope reigned for such a short time. World peace will be tough for him to handle because of the Middle East situation. I lean more toward a liberal pope — perhaps not totally liberal — but one that acts quickly on changes. There are some changes that should be made while there are still others that should remain the same. I think he's a powerful figure and the world listens to him."

LISA VACCARO
soccer

"He'll have to bring unity back into the church and answer all questions about the church. He'll have to face the problem of women's ordination because it is coming up again and again all over the world. A liberal pope will better be able to face these problems. The pope is a powerful person because the world listens to him."

REGINA MORANO
Junior
class president

"I think women wanting to be priests will be one of the biggest problems and also people want more change than ever. He will definitely be liberal because the people of the Catholic Church are searching for change. I don't think he's powerful because I don't think the protestant world is influenced by him."

PAM VACCARO
Senior Student Senate

"Women's ordination, abortion, world problems especially the spread of Communism. He should be both conservative and liberal. I think he has power because people, including non-catholics look to him because he's God's representative."

JOANNE MAZUREK
Junior
ski club

"To try and get people to agree with his decisions. I think he'll get involved in world peace because he's a powerful figure and people listen to him. I think popes have to be politically involved as well as religiously involved in order to get things done."

JANE GREEN

"I think he might have problems with being identified with Pope John Paul and Pope Paul VI. I think he'll try to be a bit like both of them but will try to do more. There's many different problems and I think a liberal pope will better be able to face problems and I think a liberal pope — one willing to change them — will better be able to face them."

EILEEN SULLIVAN
Junior
tennis

"He's going to have to pick up where Pope John Paul left off. He's going to have to make a good impression on people so they'll believe what he says. The new pope will have to be strong and do what he thinks is right. He'll have to deal with the abortion issue. I do think the pope is a powerful figure."

New Look for AQ Band

The Aquinas Institute Band has caught the fever. One of the selections that they will play this year is "Night Fever" from the movie "Saturday Night Fever". Everything about the band this year is new. The band room was converted from a dreary collection of floorboards to a colorful learning center for music through the efforts of senior Don Dohr and Father Don Kuder. In the uniform department, the band has dropped the cumbersome shakos for sleek black crushed velvet "aussies".

have a studio band which will play music ranging from classical to contemporary to jazz. "This," he said, will be made up of the best players in the band, to encourage them to carry on a profession in music."

Junior Kevin Lynd and senior Don Dohr proudly show Dennis Caiazza the new "aussie" hats which have been added to their uniform.

The band officers this year are junior John Veltre and seniors Don Dohr and Tim Stone. The drum major is senior Dan Welch and he is assisted by junior John Weber. Dennis Caiazza, a graduate of the Crane School of Music and Potsdam State Teachers College is band director. He sees a bright future for the band and observed, "I can see a time coming when boys will come to Aquinas not only for its academics but also as an excellent music school."

Caiazza indicated that later in the year the school will
