Speaking Out

"Two roads diverged in a yellow wood and I, I took the one less traveled by, and that has made all the difference."

Robert Frost

I wonder how Robert Frost would have reacted to the thousands of dead bodies huddled together as a result of the tragedy in Guyana? Also, I wonder if there was something more to this poem than a literary masterpiece? Could the situation have been prevented if people had followed Frost's philosophy?

The idea that thousands of innocent people looked to another person for meaning in their life is a sad affair. It is even sadder that these vulnerable people had to find an Antichrist for the person who would do so much for them.

I find myself pitying those people. They had such a poor sense of worth that they had to look elsewhere to enrich it. The whole principle of individualism keeps coming to mind and I can't let it go unsaid.

The road traveled by so few is the most important journey a person will ever take. It is the people who don't realize this that end up like those in Guyana. Yet sadly enough, they aren't the first and the situation is not uncommon.

This type of thing has happened several times in history. Look at the popularity of cults and communes during the 1960s. It was the same problem then. Instead of looking to themselves for answers, people overlooked their most precious attribute and looked elsewhere. They doubted their own existence and worth and depended solely on someone else. They also were hurt.

A very wise lady who has come to mean a great deal to me pointed out that Guyana never had to happen if people would have trusted themselves. You have to realize that you make your life what it is and it is only those who wish to compromise that fact who get hurt. You have to experience, to decide and to succeed. No one can do it for you. If only people would open their eyes to their own identity, the road to success would be a constant traffic jam.

Students To Visit Europe

A group of Aquinas students plan to visit Madrid and Paris over Easter vacation. In addition to the sights of Madrid they will take excursions to Toledo and the Valley of the Fallen, where Franco is buried. Climbing the Eiffel Tower is only a small part of the Paris itinerary which will include a trip to Versailles. A member of the Aquinas faculty will accompany the students on this tour which is being arranged by the American Institute of Foreign Study.
