

Kodak remembers a boy's dream.

He was a messenger boy, a clerk, and a dreamer. But his dream would change the view of the world.

Several years after this portrait of George Eastman was taken, he formed what would become the Eastman Kodak Company. That was in 1880. In the years that followed, a multitude of men and women helped to make Eastman's dream come true.

Today, Kodak is more than meets the eye. We are hundreds of sophisticated products for photography, science, and education. We are thousands of people—in the United States and abroad.

In 1980, we'll celebrate the start of our second century with a year-long series of programs planned for our employees, friends, and neighbors. Events include concerts, fireworks, sports clinics, and more. Specific dates and places will be announced as the year 1980 progresses. We hope you'll share in the festivities.
