

There's a touch of Grace in Kodak Colorburst instant cameras.

One of the most important parts of your new Kodak Colorburst instant camera is the shutter. It's the "heart" of your picture-taking capabilities. Someone must oversee the many shutter-assembly steps and testing operations and approve the unit's operating precision before it's placed in the camera. That person is Grace Uttaro of Marwood Road in Greece. She's the general supervisor of the instant camera shutter assembly at Kodak Apparatus Division.

Grace began her career at Kodak in 1952 in camera assembly. In 1963 she progressed to key operator, and was responsible for training new personnel. She became a group leader in 1973. Soon she was made supervisor. This past spring, Grace was promoted to general supervisor, with up to 200 assemblers and eight supervisors reporting to her.

Grace feels courses completed in a managerial training program at Kodak have been most helpful in her new position as general supervisor. However, we suspect that her ability to listen and put herself in another person's place has helped her even more.

If you're getting the impression that we're proud of Grace Uttaro and the progress she's made in her 27 years at Kodak, you're right.

But we're equally proud of the products she, and thousands of others have helped us manufacture.
