Special McQuaid Christmas

Equal Time

What significant change or event happened in the 70s that will carry over into the 80s?

"The Iranian crisis because everyone is thinking about war and no one knows what's going on. A great thing that happened in the 70s was the Pope's visit to the U.S. — that was good for the country."

JULIE SPATH
Senior

"The gas shortage. The price is outrageous and it will keep going up. Inflation is another thing. On the good side, women took their place in the world and are getting better job positions. I thought the 70s were good years."

"I think the worst was Watergate because it made everyone think about the government in the wrong way. People wondered what would happen to the government because of it. But it turned out for the best — the president resigned and the government was basically good after that. I don't think something like that will happen in the 80s."

MARY JEANNE SCHMITT
Senior

"I think the important thing in the 70s was self-awareness — the drive to know oneself. It's going to be the major thing in the 80s. To me this could be bad or good. On the bad side — people begin thinking of themselves so much they lose touch with other people and their needs. On the good side — people aren't going to do things because the government wants them to — they'll do it for their own reasons. Hopefully, through Watergate and Vietnam, people won't be sheep anymore."

"I think it is good we made it through the 70s without a world war. One of the significant events was the Three Mile Island crisis. Nuclear energy will have to be our source of power and it showed the risk isn't as great working with nuclear power as people think it is."

LORI PARSONS
Junior
SGA

"The best thing in the 70s was the Pope's coming to America because it was good the way he pointed out his views about religion. The worst was the Iranian situation because it could lead to war and that's one thing we don't need. Then there's everything else going on like inflation and the gas shortage. I hope the 80s will be a little better."

JULIE SCHMIDT
Senior
CSMC

"The realization that war doesn't get us anywhere. We're tempting more negotiations like the SALT treaties to limit nuclear war. A bad carry-over from the 70s is the apathy — nobody cares about the government, they don't want to get involved and it's on the increase. I think it will prevail through the 80s."

MISSY DEROSE
Senior
class president

"I think it was the sexual revolution. In this country it was the most influencing — at least among the American teenagers. Their thoughts on marriage and morals are so completely different from any other decade. I think this attitude will be passed on through the generations until there's another revolution and ideas change again."
