Will Toe the Line — Dutch Bishops

Rome — After three weeks of discussion in the Vatican, the hierarchy of the Netherlands and Pope John Paul II signed a document affirming conservative church doctrine.

women who have increasingly taken on many of the functions of priests in recent years — Bishop Descamps, stated flatly: "The hearing of confessions and the anointing of the sick are reserved to priests alone, never to deacons, or pastoral workers."

liberal and two as conservative. One of the liberals, the nation's primate, Cardinal Johannes Willebrands, alternated chairmanship of the meeting with Bishop Godfried Danneels, a Belgian theologian. Bishop Danneels said the conclusions were not only meant for the Netherlands Church but for other Catholics as well.

At a news conference following the meetings, Cardinal Willebrands told reporters that the document was in close harmony with Vatican II. He added that he hoped that Dutch Catholics would wholeheartedly support the conclusions. A pastoral letter to this effect was to be read at all Dutch Masses Sunday.

It called for priestly celibacy and declared that the laity must not be permitted to perform the functions of priests and become a "parallel clergy."

Of Holland's seven bishops, five are generally described as

If carried out, the document would end the Dutch practice whereby married priests are able to say Mass and carry out other sacerdotal functions.

During the discussion, Bishop Albert Descamps, secretary of the Pontifical Biblical Commission, declared that "the proper character of the liturgy and of sacramental piety" must be "safeguarded."

He then listed solemn administration of baptism, hearing of confessions, sacramental anointing of the sick, and performance of marriage ritual as being the strict province of ordained priests and bishops, or, in some cases, ordained deacons.

In what was seen as a warning to Holland's controversial "pastoral workers" — the theologically trained but unordained lay men and

Fr. LeFrois Gets Post

Father Bernard LeFrois, OSB, a Rochester native, has been appointed to the staff of Benedictine Military School in Savannah, Ga.

The Benedictine priest has been on the faculty of St. Vincent College in Latrobe, Pa. since 1973.

Prior to the college post, Father LeFrois spent 20 years as an Air Force chaplain and retired as a lieutenant colonel. His military assignments were in Alaska, Hawaii, Tennessee, Kansas, Georgia, Mississippi, Texas, Germany and Vietnam. He was decorated three times. He received a Commendation Medal in 1953, a Distinguished Unit Award in 1955, and a Bronze Star in 1970, the last for meritorious service while engaged in ground operations in Vietnam.
