Equal Time

Do you think college sports are overemphasized?

NOTRE DAME

MIKE BATTERSBY
Sophomore

"Yes I do because they give scholarships to anybody who's good in sports. They should give it on how much education they have instead of whether or not they're good in sports. If the athletes have good grades admission preference is okay, but not if they don't. Some day the athletes won't be able to play sports and they'll need to know how to do something else."

MIKE NICKERSON
Junior
track

"Some sports like basketball and football, yes, but not others. You never hear anything about track or baseball or some of the others. That should be changed, but I doubt it will. Special admission for athletes should depend on how good they are and their ability, or whether or not they're good enough to help the college out. When I pick a college, it'll be for education first, and sports second."

BETH VETTER
Senior
yearbook staff

"Yes, because when you get older you can't play sports and you'll need the education to get a good job. They should have sports, but the big colleges are always the ones on TV — they should get the small colleges on too. Athletes shouldn't get special admission preference, because if they don't have good grades they won't necessarily do well in school. I think you should have good grades to get into college."

NANCY MALONEY
cheerleader

"No, because I think that's part of college life. Colleges shouldn't give athletes admission preference because they could take the place of someone else who really wants to go to college. In choosing a college, the importance of the sports program would depend on if I wanted to get into sports. It's not particularly a reason to select a college."

B.J. LYNCH
cheerleading

"I think it's good that they have a lot of attention drawn to athletics in colleges. It makes people notice outstanding athletes. If I was going in for athletics, it would make a difference in what college I went to; it wouldn't make any difference if not. I don't think it's fair to give athletes special admission preference. They should have to earn their admission."

JIM WHITE
Senior
basketball team manager

"No, because I feel that people go to college to go to classes and to participate in and to watch sports — they go hand in hand. Part of college is sports. Sports, I feel, are used as an entertainment to unwind after a week of classes. I feel that people should earn scholarships because they're good in school, and people good in basketball, for example, should get scholarships because that might be their future. When I go to college it will be for the education first, sports second."

KATHY GROSVENOR
Freshman
track

"No, because everybody likes them; everybody likes sports. I think scholarships for sports are great — some people don't have the smarts but they're good in sports so they can get the scholarship. I definitely hope I can get one some day. For me, a college's track program would be important in selecting a college."

TERRY McGILL
track

"No, because I think they're an important part of college life. Participation in college sports gives you relief from the strain of studying, plus it's enjoyable. I think athletes should get scholarships the same way people do for academics. I think special admission is okay, because if they look to professional sports, it's a job like any other."
