

Remembering

Many of the persons in this 1930 photograph of the graduating class at Holy Family School will gather for a 50th anniversary reunion Sept. 27 at Barry's Party House, according to Leo Reger a member of the class who is helping organize the event. He also noted that classmates from New Jersey and Florida will attend the reunion.

Talks With Parents

Joyful, Sorrowful, Glorious

With the feast of the Assumption upon us, I'd like to talk about people and the mysteries of the rosary. Our family has a tradition of saying a rosary together every day of car travel, and a couple of years ago, I noticed that the same individuals always picked the same mysteries when it was their turn to choose. Not only that, their choices seem in tune with their outlook on life. Reflecting further, I recalled the same thing when I was young. Certain family members always chose the joyful mysteries, others the glorious and others the sorrowful.

Since then, I've polled various friends who admit they, too, have favorite mysteries. I wonder what our choices tell us about ourselves. Instead of being labeled traditional or renewal, conservative or liberal, or other modern categories of Catholics, perhaps we'd be better catalogued as joyful, sorrowful or glorious Catholics. I don't know if this analogy bears any kind of scrutiny but reflect with me on three types of Catholics we commonly meet.

There's the joyful type, the person who is very much interested in the humanity of Jesus, the Holy Family and other persons in the Bible and Church. Mary and the saints are very real and details of the Nativity, Visitation and other facets of their human lives are basic to their faith while these details are sometimes brushed by others as trivial.

Joyful Catholics like rituals and prayers that speak to their daily lives but they aren't interested in reflecting on theological issues. They've chosen a May crowning over the Stations, a risen over a crucified Christ, and prayers of hope rather than despair. They tend to look for what's pleasant in Scriptures, what's good in people and what's hopeful in the Church, even if it means blinders at times.

smile at Mass and they would prefer mournful church music to joyful. Church and God are serious business and they don't see much hope in today's Church.

Glorious types are those who know primarily a risen Christ. They tend to stress the divinity of Jesus over the humanity. Prayer is far more important than social concern or justice to them and they resent church involvement in social justice spheres. They get upset because the parish spends too much time on education, fund-raising and activities, and not enough on prayer.

They wish they could get their families, pastors and pewmates to pray as they pray and they often say so. They tend to be despairing of people but hopeful of God, affective rather than reflective and scripture rather than theology oriented.

Sorrowful Catholics are those who put the Passion as the focus of Christ's life on earth and place everything else in relation to it. They stress the Nativity not so much as a joyous occasion but as a prelude to the Crucifixion, and Easter as the other end of Good Friday.

They prefer crucifixes that show the agony of Jesus. They tend to pray as unworthy beings to an awesome God. Hell is very real to them and they are surrounded by sin, their own and the world's. They feel uncomfortable when people
