Delegates Leave for Home

By John Dash

The vice president of the United States told them that they represented the epitome of the American spirit of giving. A senator warned them against governmental encroachment in affairs proper to the private sector, a futurist challenged them to stride confidently into a new age, and a bishop prayed with them for parishes to assume responsibility for social ministry.

They were the 1,600 delegates to the annual convention of the National Conference of Catholic Charities and the biennial meeting of the Association of Ladies of Charity of the United States. The gathering was held in Rochester, with the diocesan Charities office hosting the event.

The four-day event concluded last Tuesday with an address by Vice President Walter Mondale, in town to promote the campaign of President Ronald Reagan had been invited to speak to the group as well, but, according to Maurice Tierney, head of the diocesan Catholic Charities, Reagan declined.

The day before, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-NY) warned the group against the gradual submersion of private organizations which become dependent on big government.

He said that "the national government should assume only those responsibilities that cannot satisfactorily be carried out by the states, and the localities or by the myriad of private structures and organizations."

At stake, the senator said, is the principle of federalism, known in Catholic social justice teachings as the principle of subsidiarity.

fact that the former phrase may be more applicable.

— Thanks to all those readers who sent in recipes (or requests) following the printing of the chili sauce and chili con carne recipes. If this were a cooking column we'd have no trouble filling it on a regular basis. It's nice to know that a lot of somebodies still regard the kitchen as more than just a place to keep the instant coffee.

As consequence of such submersion, Sen. Moynihan said, is, "Independence is eroded. Autonomy is undermined. Sovereignty is diminished. The actions of the state become more important; the decisions of the state become more determinative. The ability to pursue objectives that the state does not share, in ways cannot share, perhaps should not share, is curbed."

Love, 'Humor' And Obey

A little of this and some of that...

— Couponing has become a way of life and nobody is more helpful or enthusiastic about cutting out coupons from newspapers and magazines than the kids.

Just yesterday I found a neat pile of the things for such items as "the new one pound FUN size bags of Baby Ruth and Butterfinger." Other popular items: Captain Crunch, La Pizzeria Pizza and some new-fangled dog food that simulates steak, no doubt the most nutritious product on the list.

— "Yipes," said our son cheerfully as he flipped a very juicy hamburger patty to the side of his plate, a full third of it resting on the silverware to the side, "for a minute there I thought I was going to miss the dish."

— Fortyitis has settled in with a vengeance and the earliest eye exam possible is still two months away. The morning paper with that first cup of coffee in hand tends to blur alarmingly. Still, a lifelong habit is not broken easily and I plow along, sometimes with better results than the writer intended. The other day for example, I read "love, HUMOR and cherish" when it was actually "love, HONOR and cherish." A lot of spouses can testify to the
