Class, Style Not Same

The Reagans, say their friends, are going to bring class back to the White House, the implication being, of course, that sometime in the past few years, it flew the coop. As proof they cite forthcoming grandeur in areas of interior decoration, entertainment and dress.

The media, bored obviously with such old-hat news as the hostages, inflation and the energy crisis, has made much of these pronouncements. And most readers have been terribly grateful. Diversion, after all, does not come easily these days.

The problem is, however, that both the Reagan intimates and the media appear to have confused class with style, a distinction that became muddled during the Kennedy administration which had some of each, but noticeably more style. Whether the new residents bring class, or only style, to Washington, remains to be seen.

Style, as the dictionary points out, is flair. It denotes a mode of elegant, fashionable, luxurious living. And to those who pay it homage, appearance is everything.

Class, which comes from the Latin word classis for division and now means first or highest, is a mark of excellence or having exceptional merit.

Some people confuse the words class and classy. Again there is a definite distinction. (Those with class use neither label, the first deemed declassé and the second merely vulgar.) Restaurants boasting potted palms and haughty maitre d's are sometimes termed classy. So, too, are gentlemen who always grab for the check and gentlewomen who can't get dressed without the aid of Gucci, Pucci and Givenchy. This is pandering to one's personal insecurities, but it is not class.

Class is, if the reader will excuse the term, top drawer, although it has little to do with one's origins or station in life. It is knowing what you are rather than who you are. It is refusing to deny those who are near and dear even when they are most troublesome or embarrassing.

Class demands the utmost of oneself in matters of morality, social consciousness, and private, as well as public, behavior. It shuns pretense, sham and artifice.

It does not worship excellence for excellence's sake but seeks it out because it exists in partnership with truth, beauty and goodness. It reflects the hand of a Divine Planner.

Class is being oneself and being comfortable with it, all the while striving for self-improvement.

People with class do not always succeed in what they set out to do, often because they set such high goals for themselves. When they fail, or it seems as if they have failed, they do not attempt to conceal or rationalize it.

Class has as its most intimate bedfellow, courage. These not-so-common qualities are inextricable whether dealing with garden party gossip or foxhole fire. And Hemingway's characterization of courage as "grace under pressure" might well be applied to class, as well.

Turin Expert To Speak St. Lawrence, Greece

Dr. Harry Gove, the internationally acclaimed nuclear physicist, will answer questions in his second field of competency, the Shroud of Turin, at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Jan. 28 at Blessed Sacrament Church.

DR. HARRY GOVE

Dr. Gove, chief of nuclear research at the University of Rochester, was a member of the team of American scientists who tested the cloth believed by many to be the burial shroud of Jesus.

Dr. Gove's experiment, however, was not permitted by the ecclesiastical guardians of the cloth. His would have been the only test to accurately determine the age of the fabric, thought by some to date from the 12th century.

His experiment would have meant taking a four-inch-long thread from the cloth.

Turin authorities, however, refused on the grounds that such a move would damage the integrity of the item.

THOUGHTS TO CONSIDER

EDWIN SULEWSKI FUNERAL DIRECTOR

If you have recently experienced the death of someone close to you, you probably find yourself in a time of great emotional stress. Your normal love of life and all it offers may be temporarily suspended, as you face a period of adjustment and recovery.

Each individual works through grief in his own way. Some are able to accept help from family and friends — others draw inside themselves, and find this a time that it is difficult to relate to others.

For several weeks — or months — you may find yourself almost continually aware of your loss, with it seldom far from your thoughts. However, as the months pass, and you become more aware of life continuing around you, you will find that your thoughts once again begin to return to your own interests.

Time — is probably the greatest healer. We can help in your adjustment. Please consult with any member of our staff.

Use our lending library, audio visual aids, and audio cassettes on dying, death, bereavement and related subjects. We are available for group discussions.
