Bishop Clark's Statement On Archbishop Lefebvre

Archbishop Lefebvre is a validly ordained Roman Catholic Bishop. As such, he has my esteem and fraternal affection.

At the moment he does not lawfully exercise the fullness of his episcopal office, and his visit to this area is neither at my invitation nor is it sponsored by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Rochester.

Reports indicate that the Archbishop has thus far refused to accept the liturgical, sacramental life of the Church as revised by Vatican Council II. By this refusal, he has raised questions about his ability to live in full communion with the College of Bishops.

It has also been reported in the press that Archbishop Lefebvre has been in dialogue with the Holy See about the resolution of these matters. I hope these reports are true and pray that full reconciliation will be realized in the near future.

Until such reconciliation occurs Roman Catholics do not lawfully participate in the liturgical, sacramental life of churches aligned to the Archbishop.

Bishop Urges Nestle Boycott

By John Dash

Bishop Matthew H. Clark has "decided to support the boycott of all Nestle's products endorsed by our Diocesan International Justice and Peace Commission."

The bishop further asked "Catholic institutions (such as hospitals, colleges, schools), individual parishes and people of conscience to study this matter carefully and to join me in this effort by not purchasing Nestle's products."

At the heart of his decision, Bishop Clark said last week, is Nestle's promotion of infant formula in Third World countries. He asked diocesans to pray "for a corporate change of heart which would place a higher priority on children of the very poor than on aggressive marketing."

"Companies from developed Western nations have a moral responsibility to examine the basic issues of the use of their product in regard to consumer health," he said. "My hope and prayer is that we, as part of the Church of the wealthiest nation in the world, can by our actions demonstrate effective care and concern for the people of all nations with whom we share life on this earth."

The bishop indicated that he reached his decision after visiting with Rochester missionaries in Chile, Bolivia and Brazil last January. "They all asked me to become more aware of the responsibilities multinational corporations bear in marketing their

Mrs. Scarpulla Named
'Mother of the Year'

The independent panel of judges for the Courier-Journal Mother of the Year Contest has selected the entry nominating Mrs. Fred (Mary Ann) Scarpulla, a mother of three and part-time employee of Sibley's, as Mother of the Year.

Mrs. Scarpulla's name was submitted by her son, 17-year-old Fred Jr., in an essay which stated, "It takes an understanding mom to cook dinner for 12 football players, when you walk in the door and remember that you never asked her."

The contest, which was open to young people under the age of 18, drew more than 670 entries.

The judges also named as runners-up Mrs. Deborah Martello, on an entry from her daughter, Teri Latona; Mrs. Richard Florczyk, from an entry by her daughter Michele; Mrs. David DeBell, from an entry by her daughter Karen; and Mrs. Bruce Nichols, from an entry by her daughter Charlene.

Mrs. Scarpulla, her husband, Fred Sr., and sons Fred Jr., Mark and Paul, will be treated to dinner at the Genesee Plaza Holiday Inn. In addition, they will be feted with champagne from the Cork and Bottle Liquor Store and be given passes to the Cine 1, 2, 3, 4 Theaters. Candies from Fanny-Farmer are also on their way to the Scarpulla home as is a crystal bud vase from Trio Jewelers, and a complete make-over which includes makeup, manicure, facial, and hair-do from Tony and Friends. Perkins Family Restaurants will host Mrs. Scarpulla as well. She will also be wearing flowers from Hall-DiMaria.

Each of the runners-up will receive a crystal ring-holder from Trio Jewelers, a certificate for a wash and set or blow dry from Tony and Friends, flowers from Hall-DiMaria, champagne from the Cork and Bottle Liquor Store, and a certificate from Perkins Family Restaurants.

In addition, Mrs. Martello will dine at Glen Iris Inn in Letchworth Park; Mrs. Florczyk at Pierce's Restaurant in Elmira; Mrs. DeBell, Manhattan Restaurant; and Mrs. Nichols, H.M.S. Bounty Restaurant.

The panel of judges included Ms. Gail Smithers, promotion manager at Long Ridge Mall; David Nolan, news director of Channel 10/WHEC-TV; Frank Sibilio, vice president for personnel and community relations, Sibley's; and Judge Michael Telesca of the Surrogate Court.

The Courier-Journal Mother of the Year Contest drew entries from all corners of the diocese.

Sr. Giglio
Dies at 42

Mass of Christian Burial was celebrated May 3 for Sister Grace Giglio, SSJ, who died Thursday, April 30, 1981. Sister Grace was communications director of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The funeral rites were held at the Motherhouse of the congregation.

Sister Grace entered the Sisters of St. Joseph in 1956 from Holy Apostles Parish. She taught for several years in Rochester, Elmira, Waterloo and Avon. She was principal at St. Agnes School in Avon.

In 1979, after taking a masters degree in media studies from the New School for Social Research, she was named communications director for her congregation. This year she was listed as a co-producer of Real to Reel, the diocesan telecommunications effort.

Sister Grace is survived by her father, Samuel; two sisters, Mrs. John Ideman and Mrs. Richard Piperni; and a brother, Vincent, all of Rochester.

Sister Grace also coordinated production of the weekly Sisters Reflect column for the Courier-Journal.

Viewpoint: Sisters Reflect

We Must Reflect Dignity
Of the Person

Following is the column written by Sister Grace Giglio, SSJ, as part of the "Sisters Reflect" series. The column was scheduled for June 3 but it is being published this week because of Sister Grace's death.

The highest form of communication is communion with God.

I hold this tenet as a touchstone for my communication ministry — which I define as helping others to relate to God and to each other. I see this function of reconciliation as a major role in the Church's use of modern media technology in the field of communication.

It is human to communicate and thus we all share in this ministry in one form or other. My part is specifically related to developing media projects on a congregational, intercongregational and diocesan level.

As a congregational communication director, which is my main ministry, I am involved in facilitating the flow of information both within and without the congregation. This means publishing a weekly internal newsletter, occasional photo essays, and a yearly calendar of events. I document significant events with slides, black and white photography, audio and video tape. I serve as a resource person to assist in media projects, supply information and materials for publication, displays and presentations.

On an intercongregational level, I serve as liaison with the Courier-Journal and the Diocesan Sisters Council to bring about this weekly column.

One of the special projects I have been involved with at the diocesan level is the production of "Real to Reel." I was introduced to this television format through scholarship participation in the National Institute for Religious Communications in New Orleans last June. As a result of sharing this information, the program was piloted in our diocese this spring. This series, I believe, has enabled people at the local level to tell their own stories. This process of self-revelation and expression allows people to use the media rather than be used by it.

Third World people do not have the freedom or technology to use media in this way. In working with our missionary Sisters in South America and the National Sisters Communications Service in the United States, I am aware of the need to raise the level of consciousness of the plight of Third World peoples who do not have media access. A New World Information Order must be established to counteract the dominance of biased First World reporting. A disproportionate percentage of news coverage is devoted to developing countries, despite the fact that they account for almost three fourths of humankind.

Whether our reporting is at the local, diocesan or international level, we need to reflect truth and the dignity of the person. The process of communication must not destroy the person. The process that occurs in the lives of people through the telling of their story, while using modern media technology as well as person-to-person contacts, aids in defining relationships.

This is my ministry — helping people to tell their story, to each other and to their God.
