

Visiting Prelate

At that time, it was decided that the "questions raised should be dealt with in a concrete fashion by the diocese, Father Schwartz said, hence the preparation of the diocesan policy statement.

By establishing a health board, the statement says, "Any priest with a drinking problem may voluntarily seek help from this board. The bishop also has access to this board for assistance and advice in dealing with this disease. If a priest refuses to accept his disability as an illness in the face of competent recommendations to the contrary, the bishop may insist that he follow the health board's recommendation."

In addition, the priests encouraged the diocese to establish "an ongoing education and information program on alcoholism . . . It is anticipated that this program will reach all levels of operation, including seminaries and houses of formation. The long range objective of this policy is "prevention."

The council statement said the primary purpose of such a diocesan policy "is to assist, intelligently and compassionately, those priests

Computers Join Class At Nazareth Academy

New to the Business Department at Nazareth Academy is a teaching duo which works without pay, doesn't take holidays, or stop for lunch. It's the Zenith Micro-Computer Word Processor and its companion, the Xerox Diablo printer. They are the latest addition to the many pieces of equipment the Nazareth business students use every day in their office training.

Because Nazareth is piloting a course, Integrated Business Data Processing, for the State Education Department the students must be taught the rudiments of running a computer, keyboard and doing business functions on a small business computer. Sister Dolores Anne Heuther, instructor, noted that, "the girls are really enthusiastic about the course. They know they are learning skills that anyone wishing to go into business today should be totally familiar with."

In January, according to school sources, supervisors from the State Education Department will visit the school and assess the progress of the course. In June, the course will be evaluated, and in September it will be required in all high schools in New York State.

who are disabled by the disease of alcoholism and/or other chemical dependencies. Our only intention is to help them regain that state of health and well-being which will allow full productive and rewarding ministry in this diocese."

The statement concluded that "each individual treated will, upon satisfactory completion of therapy, be given an official assignment compatible, insofar as possible, with his seniority, ability and needs."
