

Children will love a living tree that grows with them

Ecologically and economically, it pays to buy a "living" Christmas tree for your children. Even toddlers love having their very own tree, one they can keep in their own room if they want.

Having a living tree can be an awe-inspiring experience for a child, and can help teach him (or her) respect for living things.

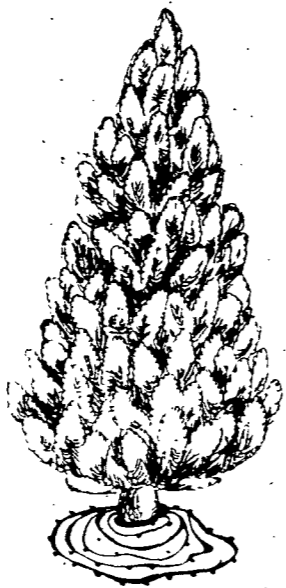

Happily many families have discovered the joys and benefits of making the family

In fact, the saplings are more likely to be found in discount stores, as they're inexpensive at this stage, and are true bargains.

The pine's pyramidal shape means that the child will easily be able to visualize this "houseplant" as a Christmas tree.

As your child grows, so will the tree. The tot who starts out with a baby tree costing approximately $1.00 will find himself as a teen with a plant worth as much as $40. And, its value in sentimental terms will make it nearly irreplaceable.

Christmas tree a living one, and planting it outdoors after the holidays are over.

The lovely, supple Norfolk Island pine makes the perfect indoor Christmas tree. Norfolk Island pines can be purchased as saplings, and can be found in discount stores and supermarkets, as well as in nurseries

MISTLETOE MYTH

Before cornering your sweetheart under the mistletoe, consider this. In olden times, it was believed that the girl who got kissed under that mystical branch would be married before the year was out.
