Religious Similarities

A friend of mine took a college course in Comparative Religions...

Many things in all religions are similar. Many noble concepts, e.g. in Buddhism and Confucianism...

While in Japan we were struck by certain ritualistic similarities at the Maiji and other shrines we visited...

At the Shinto shrine the believers take a dipper of water, pour some on their hands and drink a little as an act of purification...

I am always moved by the devotion of people of other religions, and am sad that they do not have Christ...

The difference is divine revelation, for God sent His Son with the message of love and redemption...

Voltaire was once asked: "How does one go about forming a new religion?" He replied: "Be crucified and rise from the dead."

While we acknowledge Jesus as Lord, we are also commissioned to bring the Faith and His Lordship to the whole world...

pretty much destroyed by subsequent shoguns:

Of the 100 million souls in Japan, only 500,000 are Catholics. This is one half of one percent...

The Jesuits have the greatly honored University of St. Sophia in Tokyo. I have no statistics on religious Sisters...

When we got to Kyoto, a city of about 1.5 million, I met young Mike Nakai, head receptionist of the New Miyako Hotel...

He phoned for me and got Father Dominic, an American Capuchin from Boston and New York. He joined us for dinner...

I was still puzzled that Japanese rarely physically touch one another. He explained that "they communicate through a kind of sixth sense..."

The next day, Father Dominic arranged for us to celebrate Mass at the beautiful cathedral — 15 years old, seating about 400 people...
