Capsule Movie Reviews

"Staying Alive" (Paramount) In this sequel to "Saturday Night Fever," Tony Manero (John Travolta), five years after making the big leap from Brooklyn to Manhattan, is working at odd jobs to make ends meet while he tries desperately to break into the Broadway scene. Finally he, together with the two women in his life (Cynthia Rhodes and Finola Hughes), are cast in a big musical, which is supposed to become a huge hit but is in fact a ludicrous mess. Against all the odds, Tony goes from chorus boy to star and scores a complete triumph on opening night, an outcome not altogether unexpected when you realize that the director is Sylvester Stallone, who also co-authored the script. A loud, vulgar bit of mediocre entertainment, not all moving and with no semblance of the bothersome demands of reality. Because of the benign attitude towards Tony's free and easy love life, it has been classified A-III, adults by the U.S. Catholic Conference. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG, parental guidance.

"The Draughtsman's Contract" (UA Classics) In this mannered, pretentious period piece set in late 17th-century England, an upstart and imperious artist (Anthony Higgins) agrees to make some drawings of a country estate on condition that the lady of the manor (Janet Suzman), who commissioned him, agree to provide sexual favors whenever he feels in the mood. As the story progresses, however, we become aware that currents of evil and hostility are swirling about beneath the surface, and the artist, instead of the predator he seems, stands in the way of becoming a victim. Written and directed by Peter Greenway, it begins well, the costuming, the setting and the cinematography all being quite out of the ordinary. After a while, however, it becomes apparent that style is all with Greenway, and he really isn't interested in anything that smacks of a well-crafted story line. At this point, I at least, began to look for gaffes and mediocre turns in the formal, stylized dialogue, and there were plenty to be found. "Contract" is clever but eventually boring, undone by its carelessness and its airs. Because of considerable male nudity and its general air of amorality, it has been classified O, morally offensive by the U.S. Catholic Conference. The Motion Picture Association of America rating issued no rating.
