

THE POPE

Pope Again Tackles Subject of U.S. Religious

Castelgandolfo, Italy (NC) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's English-language talk on religious life Sept. 19 to a group of U.S. bishops who met with the pope in Castelgandolfo during their official five-year visits to Rome.

Dear brothers in our Lord Jesus Christ:

I have recently spoken to other groups of American bishops about two important aspects of the great mystery of the Church: the episcopate and the priesthood. I would now like to reflect with you on yet another special gift of God to his Church, and this gift is the religious life.

So much is religious life a part of the Church, so intimately does it touch her constitution and her holiness, that it must form an integral part of the pastoral solicitude of the pope and the bishops, who have a unique responsibility for the entire life of the Church and are meant to be signs of her holiness. In speaking about religious life we are speaking about an ecclesial reality which concerns the bishops by reason of their very office.

At every moment, but especially during the Holy Year of the Redemption, the Church offers the call to conversion to all her members, particularly to Religious. This call to conversion goes out to Religious so that they may acquire the full benefits of the redemption and be ever more faithful witnesses of that redemption; so that they may be ever more authentic channels of the redemption for the people of God through their own spiritual vitality which, in the communion of saints, is a supernaturally effective contact with the redemption; and so that through conversion they may live more faithfully the unity of the Church, which is itself the effect of the redemption and a participation in it.

For this reason I wrote to all the bishops asking for their special pastoral service to the Religious of the United States in the context of the Holy Year of the Redemption. In my letter I stated, "It is my earnest hope that the Holy Year of the Redemption will truly be for religious life a year of fruitful renewal in Christ's love. If all the faithful have a right — as they do — to the treasures of grace that a call to renewal in love offers, then the Religious have a special title to that right."

The whole thrust of my initiative was formulated as an invitation, a call to be extended to the Religious, to open wide the doors of their hearts to the redeemer. In this regard I wrote, "I ask you to invite all the Religious throughout your land, in my name, and in your own name as bishops, in the name of the Church and in the name of Jesus, to seize this opportunity of the holy year to walk in newness of life, in solidarity with all the pastors and faithful, along the path necessary for us all — the way of penance and conversion."

This pastoral endeavor is of such importance that it could be fulfilled only by a full collegial commitment on the part of all the bishops of the United States. At that time I promised you my fraternal and prayerful support. I also named a commission headed by Archbishop John Quinn whose task it would be to assist you in the exercise of collegiality and to facilitate your pastoral work of "helping the Religious of your country whose institutes are engaged in apostolic works to live their ecclesial vocation to the full." I am deeply grateful to the commission for the generosity and zeal with which they are striving to formulate a suitable program that will effectively assist the body of bishops who have the main responsibility in this matter. As guidelines for both the commission and yourselves in this important work, I approved a summary of the salient points of the Church's teaching on religious life prepared by the Sacred Congregation for Religious and Secular Institutes.

Since then I have also had the opportunity, as I had hoped, to speak personally with so many bishops about religious life, hearing their viewpoints and learning about their own devoted pastoral service to Religious. I am deeply grateful to our Lord Jesus Christ that this initiative has been so zealously undertaken by the commission and by individual bishops, and that it is seen for what it is, an application — an extremely important application — of the principle of collegiality, a principle so forcefully enunciated by the Second Vatican Council. In proposing this initiative to your pastoral zeal, my first intention has been to affirm collegial responsibility for the state of religious life, which is intimately linked to the mystery of the Church and to the mystery of the episcopate. Religious need the support and assistance of the bishops in their lives of consecrated witness to the holiness of Christ and to the primacy of God. Your collegial collaboration is not only a means of giving general support to Religious and of assisting them in solving particular problems that inevitably touch their lives, it also signifies an authentic functioning of collegiality, an authentic and vital relationship between the episcopate and the Religious.

The collegial service that you, as bishops, are asked to render to Religious in the precise area of episcopal competence is, above all, to proclaim a call to holiness, a call to renewal and a call to penance and conversion. In other words, in the name of the redeemer to extend the call of the holy year, asking for the greatest possible response of love. In my letter to you I mentioned that "this call is linked in a particular way with the life and mission of Religious...It affects them in a special way; it makes special demands on their love, reminding them how much they are loved by Christ and his Church."

This initiative of pastoral care for Religious is one aspect of the great dialogue of salvation, which begins with an awareness of God's love, made visible in the incarnation, and leads to the fullness of salvation effected by this love.

The whole dialogue of salvation is directed to the full acceptance, through metanoia, of the person of Jesus Christ. In the case of the Religious, as in the case of the faithful, the process is the same: In the very moment in which we bishops recognize our own need for conversion, the Lord asks us to go out to others — humble and repentant, yet courageous and without fear — to communicate with our brothers and sisters. Christ wants to appeal through us, to invite and call his people, especially his Religious, to conversion. The aim of all dialogue is conversion of heart.

It is not my intention on this occasion to speak about all the essential elements of the Church's teaching on Religious life, as described in my letter and in the document of the sacred congregation. I am convinced that you will continue to reflect on all of these points, which are taken from authentic sources, so as to be able to explain and promote them all. At this time I would like to emphasize only a few points intimately linked to the theme of conversion and holiness of life in the context of religious life and of the pastoral responsibility of the bishops, who are "entrusted with the duty of caring for religious charisms, all the more so because the very indivisibility of their pastoral ministry makes them responsible for perfecting the entire flock" ("Mutuae Relationes," 9.c). Bishops must proclaim the nature of religious life as teachers of the faith and representatives of the Church that guarantees the charism of Religious. This proclamation is both an instruction for the people of God and an encouragement for the Religious.

In selecting certain aspects of religious life for special reflection, the notion of prayer stands out immediately. The new Code of Canon Law states that the first and principal duty of all Religious is the contemplation of things divine and constant union with God in prayer (cf. can. 663, section 1). The question of Religious being united with God in prayer precedes the question of what activity they will perform. The idea of prayer is again underlined as it touches the apostolate. The code insists that the apostolate of all Religious consists primarily in the witness of their consecrated life, which they are bound to foster through prayer and penance (cf. can. 673).

All of this tells us something very profound about religious life. It speaks to us about the value of living for God alone, of witnessing to his kingdom, and of being consecrated to Jesus Christ. Through the vows of chastity, poverty and obedience, Religious consecrate themselves to God, personally ratifying and confirming all the commitments of their baptism. But even more important is the divine action, the fact that God consecrates them to the glory of his Son; and he does this through the mediation of his Church, acting in the power of his Spirit.

All of this emphasizes the esteem that we bishops must have for the Religious and for the immense contribution that they have made to the Church in the United States. And yet this contribution is more a contribution of what they are than of what they have done and are doing. In speaking of Religious, we must say that their greatest dignity consists in this: that they are persons individually called by God and consecrated by God through the mediation of his Church. The value of their activity is great, but the value of their being Religious is greater still.

Hence one of the bishop's contributions is to remind the Religious of their dignity and to proclaim their identity before the people of God. This enables the laity to understand more clearly the mystery of the Church, to which the Religious offer so much.

The ecclesial dimension is absolutely essential for a proper understanding of religious life. The Religious are who they are because the Church mediates their consecration and guarantees their charism to be Religious. Although their primary apostolate is to witness, their other apostolates involve a multiplicity of works and activities performed for the Church and coordinated by the bishops (cf. can. 680).

Since the value of the consecration of Religious and the supernatural efficacy of their apostolates depend on their being in union with the Church — the entirety of which has been entrusted to the bishops' pastoral care for governing (cf. Acts 20:28) — it follows that bishops perform a great service to the Religious by helping them to maintain and deepen their union with the Church and by assisting them to harmonize all their activities with the life of the Church. The fruitful living of the religious charism presupposes the faithful acceptance of the Church's magisterium, which in fact is an acceptance of the very reality and identity of the episcopal college united with the pope. The college of bishops, as the successor of the apostolic college, continues to enjoy the guidance of the Holy Spirit; the words of Jesus apply still today: "He who hears you hears me, and he who rejects you rejects me, and he who rejects me rejects him who sent me" (Lk. 10:16).

Venerable and dear brothers, in the dialogue of salvation I would ask you to speak to the Religious about their ecclesial identity and to explain to the whole people of God how the Religious are who they are only because the Church is what she is in her sacramental reality. And I would ask you to emphasize the special feminine role of women Religious: In the Church and personifying the Church as the spouse of Christ, they are called to live for Christ, faithfully, exclusively and permanently, in the consciousness of being able to make visible the spousal aspect of the Church's love for Christ.

And may everyone realize that the greatest misunderstanding of the charism of Religious, indeed the greatest offense to their dignity and their persons, would come from those who might try to situate their life or mission outside its ecclesial context. Religious are betrayed by anyone who would attempt to have them embrace teaching against the magisterium of the Church, who conceived them by her love and gave them birth in her liberating truth. The acceptance of the reality of the Church by Religious and their vital union — through her and in her — with Christ is an essential condition for the vitality of their prayer, the effectiveness of their service to the poor, the validity of their social witness, the well-being of their community relationship, the measure of the success of their renewal and the guarantee of the authenticity of their poverty and simplicity of life. And only in total union with the Church does their chastity become the full and acceptable gift which will satisfy the craving of their hearts to give themselves to Christ and to receive from him, and to be fruitful in his love.

The Final Message

'Cry Out with Joy For the Gift of Life!'

This is the letter Cardinal Terence Cooke prepared to be read at all archdiocesan Masses last weekend.

Dear Friends in Christ,
How often we speak of "the gift of life," God's "gift of life" to us, His sons and daughters. What a beautiful phrase! How filled with meaning it is! In the Book of Genesis, we read of the origin of this gift: "God created man in His own image, in the image of God He created him; male and female He created them."

It is at times when life is threatened — such as times of serious illness — that the Lord gives us a special grace to appreciate "the gift of life" more deeply as an irreplaceable blessing which only God can give and which God must guide at every step. From the beginning of human life, from conception until death and at every moment in between, it is the Lord God Who gives us life, and we, who are His creatures, should cry out with joy and thanksgiving for this precious gift.

We are made in God's image and likeness, and this fact gives a unique dimension to "the gift of life." We have even more reason to be grateful. It is tragic that in our time, concepts which are disastrous to the well-being of God's human family — abortion, euthanasia and infanticide — are falsely presented as useful and even respectable solutions to human, family and social problems. Human life is sometimes narrowly viewed in terms of being inconvenient or unwanted, unproductive or lacking arbitrarily imposed human criteria.

From the depths of my being, I urge you to reject this anti-life, anti-child, anti-human view of life and to oppose with all your strength the deadly technologies of life-destruction which daily result in the planned death of the innocent and the helpless. Together we must search for ways to demonstrate the conviction in our daily lives and in our public institutions. In doing so, we must never be discouraged or give up. Too much is at stake — "the gift of life" itself.

The "gift of life," God's special gift, is no less beautiful when it is accompanied by illness or weakness, hunger or poverty, mental or physical handicaps, loneliness or old age. Indeed, at these times, human life gains extra splendor as it requires our special care, concern and reverence. It is in and through the weakest of human vessels that the Lord continues to reveal the power of His love.

For the last 10 years, I have served as chairman of the Bishops' Committee for Pro-Life Activities in the United States. With God's help, I have tried to encourage and promote a Respect Life attitude throughout our nation. I have pleaded with you to pray and to be active in the many efforts for the enhancement and the protection of human life at every stage of existence.

In October, as we observe Respect Life Month, I call on you to rededicate your efforts for the sanctity of all human life and to work to counteract the contemporary threats to life. I urge you to increase and to strengthen the programs in our parishes and communities for the poor, the elderly, the handicapped, the rejected, the homeless, the suffering, the unwanted, the unborn. I ask you to focus attention again on the Pastoral Plan for Pro-Life Activities and on the three elements of education, pastoral care and public policy which are necessary if we are to work for and defend the most defenseless members of our society.

As this grace-filled time of my life, as I experience suffering in union with Jesus Our Lord and Redeemer, I offer gratitude to Almighty God for giving me the opportunity to continue my apostolate on behalf of life. I thank each one of you, my sisters and brothers in the Archdiocese of New York and throughout our nation for what you have done and will do on behalf of human life. May we never yield to indifference or claim helplessness when innocent human life is threatened or when human rights are denied.

With you, I entrust our efforts to the care of Our Lady, who, from the moment of her Immaculate Conception to the present, has been the refuge for the poorest and most forgotten of God's people, I assure you of a special share in the prayerful offerings of my sufferings to the Father, in union with Jesus and through the Spirit of love Who is ours in abundance.

May God bless you always and give you His peace.

Devotedly yours in Christ.
Terence Cardinal Cooke
Archbishop of New York

It Po Vatic
rosary error at John P
to Mary The J special pray fo
country
Speal
open-a World
rosary l during The than in asking Lepant
asking

PERSONALS
CHRIST is forg
Herb, please
Thank you Jes
PUBLICATION Heart and received. J.
PUBLICATION I
for favors I Anthony, St. T
THANK YOU
Jude, St. Ge many favors r
THANKS TO O
Blessed Virg favors receive
THANKS TO S
received. B.A.
THANKSGIVING
Mary, St. Joe answering my

ANNOUNCE ORIENTAL FA
your facial t
massaged th
CALL: 235-261
SPIRITUAL DIF
Corcoran, OS
Center of Re
New York.
November 6. C
WANT A TAX D
need of a p programs. V donation of a truck or fou
STELLA MAI
Road, Livoni
port the Camp

Buy/Sel
ANTIQUES WANTED: ANTI
gold, silver, cr
knives, orler
lamps, glas 223-0155.

MUSIC FOR SALE: Co
board. Good I CALL: 807-936

WANTED
Portable dishw shelves, ency toys, American house. CALL: ?

Wanted
DON'T THROW buy your acc
your house
Fishery, 533-1
FURS: ANY KI
cash. Corrie through Satun