St. Mary's Launches Jubilee Celebrations

Mary's Church New Year's Eve to launch the sesquicentennial of the City of Rochester, St. Mary's and the Baptist Temple.

Rev. Hugh Morton shared the sanctuary with Father James Lawlor, pastor, who presided at the jubilee Mass. Rev. Morton, pastor of the Baptist Temple, led the prayer of

In his homily, Father Lawlor praised those of past generations who carried the spirit of the parish to this point, and he challenged his congregation to bear that same spirit into the

Following the Mass, about 300 attended a party welcoming in the New Year at St.

Christmas Finally Came

"Christmas wasn't the same this year. It came too fast," said our son. The rest of us agreed with him. Thus the Christmas cards are still affixed to the wall and kitchen door, the wreath remains over the fireplace and the Douglas fir with its lights and painted cutout wooden ornaments is still in place:

Last year in writing about the cutouts which through thick and thin for. the last 15 years, I men-tioned the name of the artist who made some of them and helped me to make the others.

Unfortunately. gremlins were at work that day and her name appeared incorrectly. So we'll try it again. Sue Regen of Penfield is the woman who designs and paints the ornaments,

A former neighbor of ours. Sue generously showed me how to cut the stars and the angels and the other ministures from birch plywood and then apply several coats of paint. It goes without saying that my finished products are very primitive compared to those fashioned by Sue but all are loved. Sue's among the Regen circle of friends. gifis are well-known

Suc's parents started the tradition of wooden cutouts for the tree during World War II when it was difficult to buy Christenes triannings. They found an article describing how to cut tiny figures from cardboard which were then to be painted or colored and hung on the branches.

But the couple decided to make something more permanent and cut the miniature Santas and reindeer from wood using a hand coping saw. It had to be a laborious project but because of them, many a family has treasures which each year are brought out and exclaimed over anew.

Another Christmas fixture which we are reluc-tant to put away is the creche. Because I was under the weather, the head of the house and the kids did all the work necessary to decorate the house

Every once in a while somebody would say, however, "But we haven't found the creche yet, Mom. Can't you remember where you put Appropriately it was 11:30 p.m., Christmas Eve, when the creche was uncarthed in the basement and taken from its protective covering.

Bringing it upstairs, we placed the traditional figures in the stable and then took the Babe from the skirted table in the living room where it resides year

Purchased in the Vatican on our first trip there, this Christ Child does not really fit in with the seting any more than I suppose than the Original did in His Uncritical, we stood back to admire the cffccl. And then Christmes came.
