Are the Olympics a true test of atheletic ability?

OUR LADY OF MERCY

No because there is a lot of politics involved like in the figure skating competition. The Americans were marked low even though they seemed to be better. There are other instances of judging prejudices, but in most instances it seems alright.'

LAURA FASO Senior Science Club

"Yes, I do, because the athletes have trained for years and they do have the talent to belong in such a competition. The games increase national pride. As much as I've seen the judges have seemed to be fair. They try to remain as objective as possible."

they are out of it; and I don't think the judges are fair in their markings. A possible way to improve the Olympic judging would be to have more than one person from each country judge, or maybe have people from a country not competing judge."

"I think they are a true showing of athletic ability in the sense that the best athletes from each country are represented. But the thing is that they make one mistake and they have to wait four years to prove themselves. The four years in between games is good because of the tradition and it gives the athletes that much more time to prepare for them. I like to think that although the judges come from different countries they keep an open mind in judging and from what I've seen they do.

"Yes I do because the athletes train so long just for a chance to win the Olympics. The judges try to be objective because they know of the hard work the athletes have put into it. I feel when a person wins a gold medal they have done their best and have been judged fairly."

LOUISE HENEGHAN Senior class president

"Yes because it takes a lot of endurance and talent and ability to compete with the best in the world. You have to be good to be there. An athlete's country's judge might favor him; and I also think the Olympics have become political because the countries tend to favor their own entries."

Cheers!
