Gift to Nazareth

More than 400 Nazareth College alumni are expected to return to the campus May

It's Nature's Easter, Too

It is Spring. The squirrels have not only taken over the birds' feeding station atop the pole but now demonstrate how to hang upside down from a tree limb to clean the hanging feeder as well.

Meanwhile, cardinals, redder than ever, chickadees, mourning doves, a flock of sparrows and a grackel or two await their turn.

Purple and yellow crocuses and hyacinth of the same persuasion are blooming on the south side of the house. There are also two shortstemmed, beautiful white flowers that are starshaped with six petals and buttery yellow centers.

I call up colleague and generous friend John Dash to ask what they are. Dozens and dozens of gift bulbs arrived last Fall from our green-thumbed acquaintance and were planted without the planter trying to remember what the little, brown paper bags said on the outside. After all, I could tell what they are when they came up, couldn't I?

Well I can't and a telephone call to John doesn't solve the mystery either. Either my description is off or he included something in the box he didn't intend to.

Whatever the case, they are beautiful -- one more miracle, one more affirmation that snow and sleet is gone and that life has at least as many good surprises as unpleasant

It has been a difficult winter: Lingering colds and come-again viruses have played a part. So, too, has the fact that this is the first year our immediate family has been separated. There have been some personal setbacks, if not defeats. And a dearfriend and mentor has died unexpectedly.

No other year have I longed so for sunshine and warmth and greenery to heal the lesions of the preceding season. And it has come, each red bud on the maples, each turning willow trumpeting the arrival of Easter. As a child, I could never understand why I heard it described as Christendom's greatest holiday. Surely, Christmas with its gaiety and gifts and greetings of good cheer held that honor. What could be more than important than the birth of Jesus Christ?

With each succeeding year, the answer grows clearer. If each sleep is a little death, so, too, is winter. Spring, Easter's showcase, signals our survival, our belief that life goes on.

A committee of students, headed by seniors Caroline Moynihan and Colleen Sullivan, began working on the project in March by requesting donations from surrounding businesses and organizations. Sponsors of the event included Champion Pro-
