

Nazareth to Inaugurate College's 7th President

Dr. Rose Marie will be inaugurated as the seventh president of Nazareth College, 3 p.m., Friday, Nov. 9, in the main auditorium of the colleges arts center. The rites will be preceded by a half-hour concert of festive brass and organ music.

Mrs. Beston, former dean of academic affairs at Castleton State College in Vermont, will be invested by Emmett J. Schnepf, chairman of the Nazareth board of trustees and judge of the Appellate Court.

She succeeds Robert A. Kidera who retired as president June 30.

A crowd of 1,150 is anticipated at the event. Among those attending will be members of her family, the college community, representatives of other colleges and universities and invited guests.

A procession of representatives, dressed in full academic attire, from about 60 institutions of higher learning will be a feature of the rites.

Religious elements of the ceremonies will include an invocation given by Father Leo Waligora, OSB, director of campus ministry; and a benediction by Rev. Sally Gilbert, assistant chaplain.

Mrs. Beston actually took the president's chair July 1. She was appointed after a 10-month search undertaken by a special college committee. At that time she was cited for her expertise in academic administration and her credentials as a scholar.

On the latter, she is a specialist in medieval literature and British Commonwealth literature, as is her husband, John.

She serves on the editorial board of "Commonwealth Novel in English" and on the national screening committee for Fulbright scholarships.

Computer Language Made Simple

This is not the column originally intended for this space.

The first column dealt with the election coverage by the television networks and how they managed to reduce the campaigns into a sea of one-liners, practiced pack journalism and were guilty of not only reporting the news but trying to mold it as well.

A lot of newspaper columnists could be singled out on the same charges but they don't carry the same clout since the majority of voters get their impressions from the home screen.

Unfortunately (or fortunately depending on one's point of view), those words are lost somewhere in computer purgatory or wherever deathless prose goes when the operator of the machine is foolish enough to think that he or she has mastered the darn thing and proceeds without double-checking every last step.

I thought about trying to recap what I had written earlier but in a fit of pique wouldn't give the machine that much satisfaction.

It is easy to think of a computer as a human being particularly when it sends back coy messages such as, "One of us must have made a mistake" or "Do you really want to rename the file from Sarah C. to S. Child?"

The responses on the game program are even worse. The smart alec comments include, "Come on, I haven't got all day" and "I'll bet you eat quiche."

It may sound ridiculous to get upset by such rudeness but I don't take that kind of back talk from my kids so why should I accept it from a floppy disk?

The head of the house who has been using a word processor for some time now knows how to handle this kind of mentality. When first sitting down to the home computer he quickly wrote that if it didn't shape up he'd cut its wires and flush it down the toilet.

I think it significant that the first message we were able to get the printer to spit out was that one. Somehow it knew it had met its match.
