

Kodak works for you, even if you don't work for Kodak.

You don't have to be employed by Eastman Kodak Company to benefit from the presence of Kodak in the Greater Rochester area.

Consider what Kodak brings to the community, just through the ongoing business of doing business here.

Granted, in 1984 we contributed $7.2 million—to education, health and community service organizations, and to civic and cultural projects in the Greater Rochester area. But we made our presence felt here in other ways as well.

For example, as one of the County of Monroe's largest corporate taxpayers, we paid over $32.5 million dollars in property and sales and use taxes last year. That's money for schoolbooks and snow removal, for parks and the people who maintain them.

For capital improvements and construction at operations around the area, we spent $368 million. And that developed into dollars for scores of local companies who came through with materials, supplies and services to make it all happen.

Finally, look at the 1984 wages of the 53,200 in our Rochester workforce, totaling over $1.7 billion. That kind of money, plus the Wage Dividend of more than $165 million, mean more than personal gain for Kodak people. Because those earnings contribute to a solid economic base that benefits everyone in the community.

A community that works.

A community we are proud to work for.

Doing more than meets the eye.
