

Guardian Angels Parade With Antoinette Brown Blackwell

On May 17, at 9:45, the children from Guardian Angels school greeted the warm spring morning with a parade. The parade served a dual purpose: to celebrate the city's Lilac Festival with the planting of a lilac bush and to honor senior citizens at Antoinette Brown Blackwell Estates.

With the steady count of one, two, three, four from the teachers, the processional started out from the school with the synchronized clash of cymbals and the waving of pompons.

The entourage was headed by a color guard and teacher Jackie Hayatt portraying Antoinette Brown Blackwell, the first ordained woman in the United States. The parade went without a hitch — except for a few missed beats now and then — to finish at the nearby estates where a lilac was planted, with the estate's residents proudly looking on as the young bush was planted.

The color guard leads the parade closely followed by Jackie Hyatt portraying Antoinette Brown Blackwell, accompanied by her five children.
