

Odessa-Montour

Time out was called. Notre Dame then tossed the ball to mid-court and call for another time out to plot its half-court strategy.

With five seconds remaining, guard Mike Johnston attempted a pass to center Dave Ferris, who was under the basket. The ball went out-of-bounds, off Ferris' hands, and Odessa-Montour ran out the remaining few seconds.

The Indians (23-1) advance to play the winner of the Section 3 vs. Section 10 matchup.

Odessa-Montour coach Myers summed up his reaction after the game with one word: "surprised."

"I have a lot of respect for the program," Myers said. "We won the game with great hearts and great athletes."

Myers called Notre Dame (17-6) the best basketball team Odessa-Montour had played.

Crusaders' coach Johnston had hoped to control Odessa-Montour's 6'3" center Owen Burgess, who had been averaging about 25 points per game. That was not to be the case. Burgess took high-scoring honors for the game with 29 points.

Guard Tom Gough pace the Crusaders with 24 points.

Odessa-Montour did a great job controlling the tempo and slowing down the game, said Johnston. Still, he added, his team had no one to kick but themselves.

"Twice down the stretch we missed layups," he said. "If you can't make layups, you don't deserve to win."

Johnston added that he was proud of his team, which entered the tournament top-seeded.

Coalition contrasts military aid, budget cuts

A coalition of Rochester's religious and community leaders have called upon local legislators to vote against Central American military aid and to override the proposed deferral of $500 million in Community Development Block Grant funds.

The Congregational Council of the Sisters of Mercy and the Central Administration of the Sisters of St. Joseph, along with such individuals as Sister Muriel Curran, diocesan vicar for religious, and Victor Bartolotta, a Mt. Carmel Parish outreach worker, were among those who signed the statement, issued at a press conference Friday, Feb. 21.

The statement noted that the amount of community development funds President Ronald Reagan has deferred until fiscal 1987 is roughly equivalent to the amount he proposes to spend on military aid to El Salvador, Honduras and the Nicaraguan rebels.

"What the President is telling the American people is that we cannot afford to rebuild our cities, preserve our older buildings or maintain housing affordable to low/moderate-income persons, but that we can afford to destroy the cities, towns and villages of Nicaragua and El Salvador," wrote Councilwoman Maxine Childress-Brown, spokeswoman for the group.

Among the legislators contacted by the group were Congressman Fred Eckert, Frank Horton, and John LaFalce and senators Alphonse D'Amato and Daniel P. Moynihan.

In addition to deferring the block development grants, President Reagan's proposed budget eliminates the Urban Development

Action Grant Program, through which the City of Rochester has received $5.3 million per year over the past eight years. Overall, the city would lose up to $8 million next year in budget cuts.

The Cynthia Fitzpatrick Housing Cooperative, where the press conference was located, is one housing project funded by those federal dollars.

Meanwhile, the president is asking for $60-$100 million for the contra rebels in Nicaragua, an increase of nearly 400 percent. He also proposes a 24-percent increase in military aid to El Salvador and a 50-percent increase in aid to Honduras.
