'58 graduate becomes McQuaid's first alumnus-principal

In an interesting switch, a member of McQuaid Jesuit High School's first graduating class was named principal of the 28-year-old school, and the current principal will assume the position of assistant to the president for planning at his alma mater, Canisius High School in Buffalo.

Father Paul Nochelski, SJ, a member of McQuaid's class of 1958, will replace Father Eugene A. Zimpfer as principal. The appointments, which are effective this summer, were announced by Father John J. McDonald, SJ, vice provincial for secondary education of the New York Province of the Society of Jesus.

Father Nochelski is the first McQuaid alumnus to become principal of the school. "It feels very good to go back to a place that was really a full part of my life," he said. "It also feels good going back to Jesuit education after being away for eight years."

Since 1978, Father Nochelski has served as director of residential life at Nazareth College and as the college's associate chaplain. He has been a member of McQuaid's board of trustees for two years and is secretary of the board's executive committee. "In going from college to high school, I believe I have some forewarning of what it's going to be like," Father Nochelski said. He noted that McQuaid is the latest school to be founded in this region by the New York Province. The youth of the school allows it to be "open-minded and innovative."

"I'm not saying that being the last-founded school in the province makes it (McQuaid) necessarily better, but there is a freedom you get there which is good," he said.

After graduating from McQuaid, Father Nochelski studied at the Jesuit Novitiate in Plattsburgh, and at Loyola Seminary in Shrub Oak, N.Y. For three years, he taught at Canisius High School, before studying theology at Woodstock College in Maryland. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1971 and returned to Canisius as assistant principal for six years.

During Father Zimpfer's six-year tenure at McQuaid, he has promoted the development of new courses in art, Latin, computers, music, freshman sciences and advanced placement, among others. He has initiated, expanded and integrated standardized testing programs and student preparation leading to high test scores and more Regents' and National Merit scholarships. Father Zimpfer has also broadened faculty development and has been a leader in diocesan-wide planning efforts.

Local Catholic high schools make clean-up effort a success

The Megaclean '86 expressway clean-up campaign held Sunday, May 4, was the biggest yet, with 926 area high school students taking pride in cleaning Rochester. Two hundred ninety-five students from Aquinas, Bishop Kearney, Cardinal Mooney, McQuaid, Nazareth and Our Lady of Mercy took part in the campaign.

The campaign was founded by McQuaid and is designed to create a greater awareness of litter and develop a sense of pride in our community's environment.

Castle/FLC, a Rochester-based automotive chemical firm, was involved in the event for the third consecutive year. Through 1986, 50 students have received $25,000 in Castle Kids Scholarships. This year, seven students from Nazareth, Bishop Kearney, Mercy and McQuaid each received a $500 scholarship. Chris Yantz and Sharon Samperi from Nazareth; Rachel Adams, Laurie Trovato and Jennifer Moss from Bishop Kearney; Theresa Broderick from Mercy; and Mike Hicks from McQuaid were chosen at random as scholarship recipients.

AQ athletic director resigns, will stay on as vice principal

Tom Gigliotti has been named to replace Dennis Sadler as athletic director at Aquinas Institute, effective next fall.

Sadler, who has been both vice principal and athletic director at Aquinas for four years, stepped down from the post to allow the new athletic director to devote more attention to the athletic program.

"With the number of girls sports we have added, and the number of students rising, we felt it was best to split my duties," said Sadler, who will continue as the school's vice president and as chairman of the Monroe County High School Hockey League.

Gigliotti has been a member of the Aquinas faculty since 1975, teaching in the social studies department.

He is no stranger to athletics at the school, having coached cross-country as well as indoor and spring track for 11 years. He has also been the meet director for the Aquinas Relays from 1981-85. A member of the Faculty Advisory Committee at Aquinas, Gigliotti is also active outside the school, participating in the Genesee Valley Track and Field Officials Association.

Speaking Out

By J. Peter Huggins

McQuaid Jesuit High School

During the last year, many musical groups have begun working for causes other than their paychecks, thereby adding a new aspect to going home from concerts. As the crowd files out of the auditorium, people distribute pamphlets advertising various charitable organizations and interest groups that are indeed in great need of help. First, bands performed in benefit concerts to help starving people in Ethiopia and the farmers in America. Now Simple Minds is using its concerts to help Amnesty International.

This represents a new wave of advertising that consists of performers talking to their audiences about whatever cause the performers are interested in. At the Simple Minds concert on May 22, pamphlets were handed out to audience members as they walked into the War Memorial. Now, the idea is that you'll go home from the concert and crash in your room. Then the next day, after you've awakened, you'll have this interesting little pamphlet to remind you about Amnesty International. The pamphlet tells you what the organization is about and what you can do to help. It also tells you to write to them if you want to learn more about their cause.

I find the idea of popular bands supporting charities to be quite a good idea. Not only are performers in the spotlight more often than those they're trying to help, but they can also talk directly to their audiences about the organizations they support. This new help from musical artists can really make the difference to the organizations. It also shows that performers and their fans really care about the people of the world. It basically becomes a matter of good advertising on the part of the special interest groups, and I applaud both the performers and the organizations for this. The more attention that can be brought to needy groups, the better.

It is now up to the public to make the next move. If you're sympathetic to the cause of a given organization, let that group know and see if there is anything you can do to help. Be a coffee achiever. Hopefully, with your support, all of us can really begin to make a difference for those in situations of great need.

Kearney music program. Performing in the concert will be the Symphonic Band, Stage Band, Twirlers, Color Guard and Junior Band under the direction of new Marching Kings director, Glenn K. Call. Assisting Call will be Dan Burke, the new assistant director, and Larry Davis, director of the Junior Band.

What does the word "success" mean to you?

Cardinal Mooney

ELAINE DELLEDONNE, yearbook, newspaper

I believe that success is whatever makes a person happy. I don't believe that money, power and position measure success — although people do choose this route and are content with their lives. True success does not happen overnight. It is a process and something that must be earned. Whether one be a doctor, teacher, a housewife, a factory worker, a custodian or a coach, a person is a success if he or she is doing and accepting the things that he or she cannot change.

MISSY ROTERT, ministry, fashion show

Success can be defined by using various factors — wealth, power, etc. However, my definition of success is achieving to the point where one is happy with one's own accomplishments. They need not be simply material accomplishments, but better yet, personal ones.

MARK SUTTON, spring musical

My idea of success is to choose a career that I will enjoy and work at it my hardest. Success is doing everything to the best of my ability. This is my goal, not just in a career but in life. Being the best person I can be. This is success.

DAVE TAFFNER, spring musical

I used to think that a successful person was one with money, a big home and a fancy car. My ideas have definitely changed.

To me, success means doing something that I truly like, regardless of money or social recognition. I'd much rather have a small salary and be happy, than have a six-digit yearly income and be bored with life.
