DeSales students relish stormy abortion fight

By Kathleen Morgan DeSales High School

A group of pro-life advocates from all over the county gathered in Washington, D.C. on January 22, to protest the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion. More than 2,000 people lobbied, picketed, made speeches and marched for life — among them 10 students from DeSales High School in Geneva.

The delegation from DeSales rode down on a bus, arriving in Washington, D.C., on Thursday morning. The students arrived at 7:30 a.m. after a ninehour ride, in time to have breakfast at St. Peter's Church.

Because of severe weather conditions, the march did not go as planned, but the DeSales students found the day active nonetheless. Early in the morning, people began their formal protest of abortion by picketing the Senate building. After talking to many senators and representatives before the opening ceremony and speeches began at noon, the group of protesters marched along the streets and sidewalks of Washington.

Washington was bustling with activity that day, as pro-life supporters fought hard for their cause. The students from DeSales left Washington at 3:30 p.m., and did not return to Geneva until 4:30 a.m. Friday morning.

"It was freezing cold, and the weather was awful," said Beth Breen, one of the DeSales students who made the excursion. "It took us almost four hours to get out of Washington alone. Even so, it was worth it."

Most of the students who represented DeSales reacted positively to the experience. Despite the cold and the confusion caused by such bad weather, several said they felt that the trip was worthwhile and the cause well worth fighting for.

Speaking Out

By Stephen Brien Cardinal Mooney High School "I can't believe that teacher failed

"Teachers always give students a bum rap."

"We try our hardest, but nothing ever seems to be enough for them."

"Teachers never want to give us a break."

The above quotes are absolutely false. Teachers do care, despite popular belief. Students don't always enjoy teachers, because they challenge us and ask us to do things that we don't enjoy doing.

Believe it or not, a teacher's job is not to make our lives miserable. Teachers want to share some of their knowledge with us.

As freshmen, we were afraid of teachers. Teachers were our first contact with authority in high school. To try and "fit in," we stayed away from teachers and mocked them, blaming them for our bad grades or failures. Gradually, throughout high school, we began to realize how much we can learn from teachers, in addition to material presented during our required courses.

As a senior, I feel that many teachers have given me valuable information about choosing colleges. Also, in talking to teachers about school, I've found out that teachers are people, too. They listen to music, watch TV and root for the same sports teams that we do.

Teachers find several things gratifying about teaching. To see a student succeed — not only in a course, but also as a person — is perhaps one of the greatest pleasures of being a teacher.

To hear a student returning from college say, "You were right!" is sometimes greater than any pay a teacher can receive.

The next time you see a disappointing grade on a paper, think twice before you blame "some stupid teacher" for giving you a bad mark.

for helping you to learn something you didn't know before.

And once in awhile, thank a teacher

I think that extracurricular activities are both helpful and fun. They help you get involved with your school, and they are physically and mentally rewarding.

MARC LAVALLEE, se

Of course, afterschool activities are helpful. That's why the majority of high school students take part in them. They get students involved in associating with other people and establish a peer group that can stay together throughout high school. If the activity is chosen wisely, a person can develop skills not only improving his success in that activity, but his entire life.

can learn something, too.

MIKE CLEARY, senior I believe that extracurricular activities — at least the academic ones require some degree of interest on the topic. General interest on a given topic can be fun, but I'm sure it is more of an educational experience. Athletic activities require a love for the game, and a desire for competition. I would view this as more of a fun thing.
