

Evangelist

 against Catholics, observed Father Larry Tracy, pastoral assistant to the Spanish Apostolate. "Any Hispanic evangelical or pentecostal is going to proselytize to 'save' Hispanic Roman Catholics, regardless of the crusade guidelines."

Other Catholics may regard Billy Graham as an evangelist of the same ilk as the scandal-scarred PTL ministry of Jim and Tammy Bakker.

On the contrary, crusade organizers claim that Graham does not collect any of the proceeds of a crusade. Since 1954, Graham has been paid a fixed salary by the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, according to Huston. Both the budget for the crusade and the expenditure of any proceeds it raises are determined by a committee of local residents.

Local church leaders have already formed such a planning committee. The five Roman Catholic representatives on the committee are: Father Robert Werth, pastor of St. Bridget's Parish in Rochester; Margery Nurnberg, director of the diocesan Department of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs; Jacqueline Dobson, director of the Office of Black Ministries; Father Thomas Mull, director of the Office of Liturgy; Ernie DelPrince and Dick Pelino.

Nurnberg is one of those who believes the crusade is too good an opportunity to pass by. "We tend to think (evangelization) is not a Catholic word," she said. "But each and every priest in our diocese is an evangelizer every time he climbs into a pulpit on Sunday ... and each and every one of us are called to evangelize as well."

In recognition of the call to evangelization — what some point to as the Second Vatican Council's most-neglected reform — Bishop

Matthew H. Clark wrote in a September 15 letter to all diocesan pastors that "we as a Church wish to encourage any of our Catholic people who wish to attend the crusade to do so."

At the same time, the bishop's letter recognized the need to "complement the approach of the crusade, by encouraging the persons who attend to renew their commitment to Jesus Christ made at baptism and confirmation."

Buoyed by Bishop Clark's letter, Catholics among the crusade organizers hope to reach more pastors with another presentation during a regularly scheduled diocesan event, such as the Priests' Convocation.

"Things will pick up as time gets closer," Nurnberg said. "This is an extremely well-run operation, and we're right on schedule."
