Mercy plans glittery gala for glamorous Hollywood dinner-auction

Our Lady of Mercy High School's gym might be mistaken for the corner of Hollywood and Vine on Saturday, Nov. 7, when the magic of Tinseltown and months of hard work come together for the third annual dinner-auction entitled "Hollywood '87"

The evening will include a cocktail hour, dinner, auction and a sweets table with Irish coffee. The auction will provide those in attendance an opportunity to bid on a wide variety of gifts, goods and services ranging from a team of Mercy students available to assist with a child's birthday party to a Caribbean vacation package.

The evening will also feature the work of Rochester-area artist Michael Sparling. Sparling's murals can be seen at the Children's Convalescent Hospital in Rochester as well as at the Cinema Theater. He has also designed creative cartoon books for the Pediatric Unit at Strong Memorial Hospital. Sparling's caricatures of such Hollywood greats as Charlie Chaplin, Helen Hayes, Charlton Heston and Better Midler will be on display at the gala.

All are welcome to participate in the festivities at Our Lady of Mercy High School, 1437 Blossom Road, Rochester, at 6:30 p.m. on Blossom 7.

Call (716) 288-7120 for reservation information.

RIT offers adventure for kids who are gifted or talented

Elementary, middle and high school students can become members of a robotics research team, combine computer graphics with video discs, or take a game-board journey through a wildlife refuge this winter at Rochester Institute of Technology.

Several workshops are scheduled for Saturdays, Nov. 7 to Feb. 20, through "Kids on Campus," a program for gifted and talented students offered by RIT's Learning Development Center. Workshops are open to students in grades five through 12.

In addition to robotics, video discs and simulated wilderness treks, workshops focus on logic, animation, electron microscopes, science, literature, imagination, drama and dance.

Workshop space is limited. For information on eligibility, times, locations and tuition, call Susan Kurtz at RIT's Learning Development Center at (716) 475-2281.

With Election Day upcoming, do you think Americans take their right to vote seriously?

Equal Time

HEATHER LELJEDAL, junior No, I don't. Most people of the older generation vote for their political party's candidate and don't consider what their (the candidates') stand on issues are. The younger generation considers personality rather than good qualifications. 	NIK MACKLER, junior I'd have to say most people don't. Usually would-be-voters don't see the whole picture. The only things they consider are what they read in the headlines or see on TV. The candidate's character isn't valued as much. On the whole, I'd rather have people who don't really know what they're voting for to not vote at all.
KELLY MURPHY, junior Yes. Younger people just starting to vote put their hearts into the vote because of the prospect of being old enough to voice their opinions. I'm basing this on the way I'll feel when I'm old enough to vote. 	DANNY KUNG, junior Most people do. There is more information to be received from the press and TV. Informed voters use their right to vote to ensure their personal freedom.
KRISTEN CLOKE, junior No, I really don't think so. When it comes time to vote, a number of people use their right carelessly. This can result in an official being elected who may not be suitable for the job. 	PETER SNYDER, junior No, the right to vote is really taken for granted. For an important part of their lives. The low ratio of eligible voters and those who actually vote demonstrates this.
