Gala to recall memories of St. Agnes High

Sunday, Jan 24, will bring back memories for the alumnae and faculty of the former St. Agnes High School, who will be together again for the first time since the school's doors closed at the end of the 1982 school year.

Many of the St. Agnes alumnae are involved in Rochester's business and professional communities, and they recall with fondness the ways in which St. Agnes prepared them for their current successes.

According to 1967 graduate Bonnie Meath-Long, associate professor of English at the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, the single-sex environment provided by St. Agnes encouraged its students to excel. "You explore male-dominated fields such as politics, and you experiment more with sports, theatre, class participation and communication," she observed. "I don't think those opportunities are as readily available in large, coed schools."

Other alumnae credit St. Agnes for fostering leadership among its students. "We were immersed in an environment that was necessary and useful in promoting the development of leadership skills, self-confidence and personal growth," said Dr. Marguerite Dynski, SSJ, a member of St. Agnes' class of 1965.

One student's mother always believed her daughter had leadership traits. But the daughter, Greece Republican Chairwoman Kathryn Whelan Phelan, credits St. Agnes for developing her potential. "The teachers at St. Agnes really drew out those leadership qualities and encouraged their growth," recalls Whelan Phelan, a 1955 graduate. "Influenced by these caring people, I have gone on to be a professional woman, active in politics and in the community, and alert to its needs?"

Likewise, Barbara Miller Healy, director of Occupational Health Nursing at Eastman Kodak Company, feels that St. Agnes' academic atmosphere contributed to her career success. "The attitude inside and outside the classroom set the stage for going on and developing your career. The faculty challenged us academically; there was no going to class unprepared," she remarks. "I respect the values they taught us - moral, religious and intellectual - which lay a foundation for life."

St. Agnes alumnae also remember their alma mater for the personal closeness it engendered. "The size gave us the chance to develop lasting relationships with other students and the staff on a one-to-one basis," recalls Joyce Lappetito Bittner, who graduated from St. Agnes in 1953, when the school was still located on East Main Street in Rochester. "I really enjoyed the smallness of the school. Walking into the school felt just like walking into a welcoming home. I remember Oriental rugs, beautiful paintings and furniture, and a grand piano?"

The elegant old structure is also remembered by Whelan Phelan, who attended the East Main campus and moved with her senior class to the new East River Road facility. "Our class of 28 girls felt a bit overwhelmed by the greater space available to us. All 28 of us were in one homeroom!" she recalls. "But the bigger halls, classrooms, athletic and other facilities gave us a chance to grow, too."

These and many other memories of St. Agnes will be recalled at the January 24 reunion, which will take place from 1:30-4:30 p.m. at the Sisters of St. Joseph Motherhouse, 4095 East Ave., Rochester. For information on the gathering, call (716)586-1000.

for just 12 infractions.

The Crusaders trailed by just 27-24 at intermission thanks to John Philipps' three-point shot in the closing seconds. The score was tied at 42 after a three-pointer by Christian Falkenberg in the third quarter, but Hornell was able to convert on its numerous free throws down the stretch to ice the win.

Falkenberg paced the Crusaders with 23 points.

Earlier in the week, Notre Dame used balanced scoring to overcome a 32-30 halftime deficit before going on to beat visiting Corning West, 68-51, on Tuesday, Jan.

The Crusaders outscored their league opponents, 16-5, in the third quarter to pull away for the win. Corning West was held scoreless until 2:28 of the third quarter.

Scott Long led all scorers with 23 points, and Philipps added 19. Falkenberg contributed 10 points for the night.

Although he was happy to see the balanced scoring, Johnston was most impressed by his club's play defensively.

"Everyone played good defense; we had a number of steals lead to baskets for us," Johnston said. "We held them to one field goal in the third quarter."

ND needed that same intensity on defense if it wished to beat Elmira Free Academy - undefeated in league play on Tuesday, Jan. 12.

"Our schedule doesn't lend itself to (inconsistency), we have to start playing consistently," Johnston said. "We have to beat EFA if we want to get back in this thing."

EFA and Elmira Southside are 3-0 in the' Sullivan Trail Conference followed by Horseheads at 3-1.
