Dress smarts

By Debra Baldwin
Copley News Service

According to "The Book of Inside Information" (Boardroom Books), the dress-for-success look for men is to emulate the boss. This usually means a conservative-looking suit, white shirt and matching tie.

Muted colors convey trust. Black, navy, pin-stripe and chalk-striped suits exude power, competence and authority.

Beware loud pastels, pink, gold, green-gray, light blue and gray-beige. Also out are European cuts, turtlenecks, colors that clash and sports clothes.

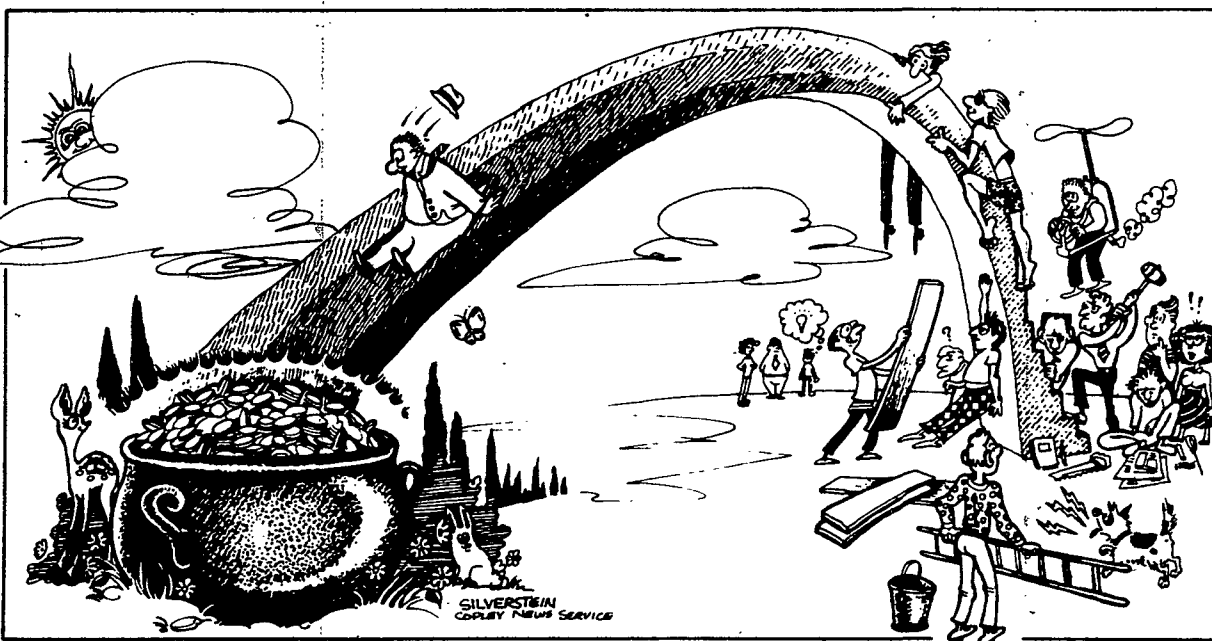

For women, good quality is the most important ingredient of the interview suit.

According to image consultant Deborah Durham, "Much depends on the prospective field — for instance, a stylish belted dress may be appropriate for an advertising, publishing or public relations position whereas for finance-related fields, you're safest with a well-tailored suit in a classic neutral shade."

If you're just out of school and unable to afford a designer suit, wear a beige or camel suit with a white silk shirt. The combination will look rich, even if the fabric is not.

Your appearance should be in keeping with current fashion, but conservative.
