'Star Trek' crew embarks on encounter with 'God'

Catholic News Service

NEW YORK — The graying gang is back whizzing around the galaxy in "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier" (Paramount).

This time out, there's a spiffy new USS Enterprise (the old starship bit the dust in the last sequel) and Chief Engineer Scotty (James Doohan) has all he can do to work the bugs out before the guys and gals return from shore leave in Yosemite National Park.

The film opens with much promise as it introduces Messianic anti-hero, Sybok, (Laurence Luckinbill). A hypnotic Vulcan, Sybok hogs the Enterprise crew and various other interplanetary hams and sets the starship on a crash course through the Great Barrier for a prophesied meeting with God.

Of course, Captain Kirk (William Shat-ner, who also directs) doesn't take too kindly to this hostage business, nor does he believe Sybok's claims. Spock (Leonard Nimoy) has reason to believe otherwise, but before Kirk, Spock and Dr. McCoy (DeForest Kelley) venture out into no man's land with Sybok, they have various Klingon attacks to divert.

While their long-awaited meeting with "God" looks more like a remake of Dorothy's heel-knocking scene in "The Wizard of Oz," the film's best bits feature chummy, comedic banter between Kirk, Spock and McCoy, especially during a weenie roast around a Yosemite campfire.

Due to minimal rough language and silly comic-book violence, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.
