

Films depict opposite ends of movie spectrum

NEW YORK (CNS) — Gadabout ghoul Freddy Krueger (Robert Englund) wreaks more mayhem in "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child" (New Line), as he once again dream-stalks teenage heroine Alice (Lisa Wilcox) and fellow grads from Springwood High.

Alice is Freddy's only real challenge as her weak-willed friends quickly fall by the wayside when Freddy returns to haunt their dreams. When Freddy begins to zap Alice through the dreams of her unborn, illegitimate child, Alice stops at nothing to obliterate Freddy once and for all.

Despite its spunky female heroine, a broad, comical performance by Englund, and innovative special effects — including clever animation — young Australian director Stephen Hopkins is still stuck with the basic story of a sadistic villain who ravages young innocents in gruesome ways. This time out, we are even treated to an expose of Freddy's inauspicious birth.

It seems his mother, Amanda, was a nun raped by psychos in an insane asylum, which helps explain Freddy's lifetime standing as an outcast and all-around mean-spirited fellow.

Although no graphic teen sex enters the picture, there are vivid flashback scenes in the asylum where the nun is brutalized and gives birth to Freddy. There's also the idea that Alice is carrying her doomed boyfriend's baby, a baby that she fights to the brink of death and insanity to save and nurture.

Due to its rough language and exploitative use of sadistic violence, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is O — morally offensive. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

'Babar: The Movie'

A classic storybook character makes his feature film debut in "Babar: The Movie" (New Line), a delightful animated adaptation of the Jean and Laurent de Brunhoff books for children.

In a charming, big-screen adventure, Babar recalls in flashback how he made his first mark as the heroic King of the Elephants. King Babar (voice of Gordon Pinset) soothes his four giggly kids to sleep with the story of his early days as the boy king when he set off to save his friend Celeste's village from marauding rhinos.

Young Babar, (voice of Gavin Magrath) uses his wits and the company of Celeste and other wildlife friends to free elephants enslaved by cruel rhino leader Rataxes (voice of Charles Kerr), and to protect all of Elephantland from sure rhino destruction.

Adapted by a Canadian animation team, "Babar: The Movie" may show little imagination as a work of art but will entrance young audiences with its lively hero, feisty heroine Celeste (voice of Sarah Polley), and a scenario that promotes the value of commitment to friends and family.

The fears shared by young Babar and Celeste when they decide to stand up to the menacing rhinos in an alien jungle will be identifiable to young children just beginning to explore unfamiliar surroundings without benefit of parents. Older audiences may also be aware of a subliminal message to save endangered elephants from being decimated or enslaved by human poachers and exploiters similar to the smug rhinos depicted here.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.
