the Southeast Quadrant's proposed plan for grade configurations was tabled for the coming year. Thus, the site(s) of the quadrant's junior high(s) remains uncertain.

Many of the students who have attended

Blessed Sacrament, meanwhile, are from parishes in the Northeast Quadrant, and thus would move to Northeastern Junior High. To allow as many of Blessed Sacrament's current seventh-graders as possible to remain together, those from Southeast Quadrant parishes were allowed to choose either Seton or Northeastern, according to Sister Diane Marie Erskine, RSM, superintendent for Catholic schools in eastern Monroe County.

The option was extended to sixth-grade students of St. John the Evangelist and St. Boniface in order to keep siblings together, Sister Erskine explained. "Because peer relationships and family ties are so strong at that age, we had a long discussion about what would be fairest to the children," she said.

The superintendent noted that the option for sixth-graders to choose between junior highs would only be offered for the coming year, which she described as a "transitional year" for the Northeastern Quadrant.

Sister Erskine acknowledged, however, that next year, the same rationale for allowing sixth-grade students to choose Northeastern — so that they could be in the same school as their brothers or sisters — could still apply. Thus, once a Southeast Quadrant junior high program is designated, families from St. John's and St. Boniface may still face having one student at Northeastern and one at the quadrant junior high. Sister Erskine does not know how the issue will be handled in future years.

Such uncertainty is not comforting to Meagher. "If they're going to do it for one year, they could do it ad infinitum," he said. "If they're going to make it a quadrant system, they should keep it that way. If they're going to make it open enrollment, they should do it now."

narrow sense.... That is why in my response I preferred the term 'respect life.'"

He called the sessions "moral dialogues," not "political debates," and said he thought they succeeded in finding a "common ground where many Catholics and others can stand and work together to eliminate the tragedy of abortion in our society."

"The common ground is this: working to eliminate the root causes of abortion,

Alumni information sought

ROCHESTER — St. Theodore's School Alumni Association needs information on alumni in order to plan for a celebration of the 65th anniversary of the school's first graduating class.

If you are an alumnus or have information on the whereabouts of any alumni, contact the association at the parish, 716/458-6260, or through Carlot DiLucia, 426-3705, or Sue Fellingner, 328-7461. You can also write to: St. Theodore's Alumni Association, 170 Spencerport Road, Rochester, N.Y., 14606.

such as the large number of teenage pregnancies, poverty, especially among single-mother households, permissiveness and violence toward women and children," he said.

He added that "many groups, now labeled pro-life, in the church, together with others, have labored to eradicate these root causes of abortion. They, like Birthright, with its efforts of crisis pregnancy counseling and support, are to be praised and encouraged."

In the letter, Archbishop Weakland also defended the controversial approach of listening and dialogue he had taken toward the abortion issue as "sound methods in this age and this culture" for meeting the challenge of how the church is to teach its message.

Some area Catholics had criticized the listening sessions, arguing that they offered a platform for dissenters and implied a lack of firmness in the church's teaching against abortion.

"I believe the strength of the Catholic tradition today," Archbishop Weakland wrote to the Sentinel, "is in its ability to offer reason and compassion, hope and justice to a diverse, pluralistic world."
