Father Francesco Turvasi, MSC, scholar

Father Francesco Turvasi, MSC, a religious scholar who taught at the former St. Bernard's Seminary in the 1970s, died Thursday, June 11, 1992, of a heart attack while vacationing in Rome. He was 68.

Father Turvasi had been teaching dogma as a professor of theology at the Pontifical College Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio.

A native of Italy who was ordained a member of the Sacred Heart Missionaries in 1949, he was on faculty at St. Bernard's for five-and-a-half years, starting in 1973. He was assistant professor of systematic theology.

After leaving St. Bernard's, he served for a short time as professor of systematic theology at Cardinal Newman College in St. Louis before joining the Pontifical College Josephinum faculty in 1988.

His particular areas of interest were Christology, fundamental theology, modernism, and the writings of John Cardinal Newman of England.

An author of numerous articles and books, Father Turvasi specialized in the theology of Cardinal Newman. Most recently he published a translation of The Theology of Canon Law by Bishop Eugene Corecco.

He earned his doctorate in sacred theology from the University of Fribourg in Switzerland in 1968.

Before joining the faculty at St. Bernard's, Father Turvasi had done research in historical theology at the Institute of Menzningen in Switzerland.

He is survived by a sister and a sister-in-law, both of whom live in Italy. A Mass of Christ the High Priest and interment were held in Rome.

Special thanks to The Catholic Times in Columbus, Ohio.
