The doctor told Dad he had only three months to live. After the tears, the denial, the acceptance, only one thing made sense. Being home together.

I called 482-0120. Visiting Nurse Hospice helped us bring comfort and compassion home.

St. Joseph's Achieves Top 10% Ranking for Quality

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO) is the national organization that accredits all hospitals in the United States.

From the smallest rural hospital to the largest, most sophisticated university teaching hospital, all hospitals face a rigorous and comprehensive review of their quality by outside physicians and nurses.

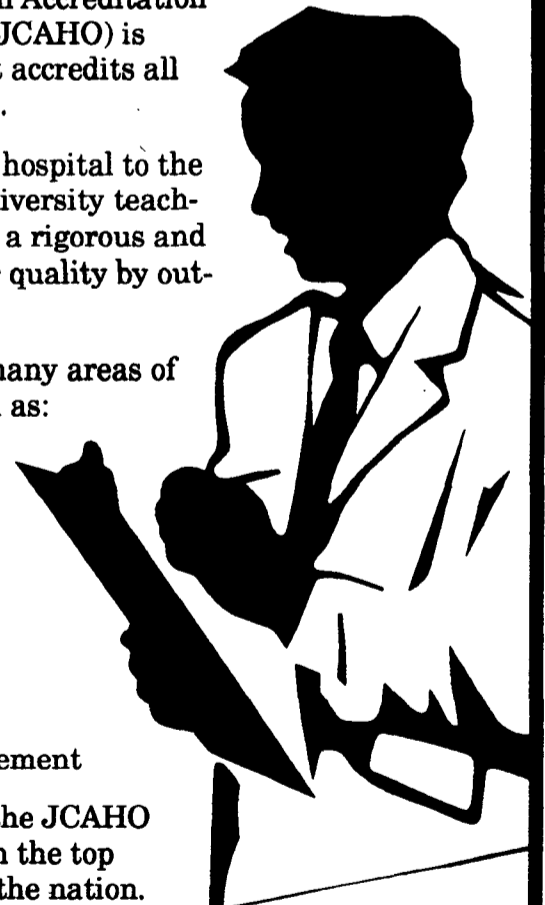

The JCAHO evaluates many areas of the hospital's operations, such as:

- Medical staff review
- Infection control
- Surgical case review
- Emergency services review
- Patient education
- Continuous quality improvement

The highest distinction the JCAHO can give is to rate a hospital in the top ten percent of all hospitals in the nation.

Only one local hospital has achieved this distinction of excellence.

"Every Fourth of July we go to Mom's house. Trouble is, every Fifth of July, we leave."

Spending holidays with Mom can be tough. They can remind you of all the days you can't spend with her. That's why there's Lifeline. A very special service that calls for help when you can't be there. Activated by the press of a button, it puts your mother in touch with well-trained professionals who know everything about her: her age, her address, her medical conditions. Plus the phone numbers of neighbors and relatives who can assist when an ambulance isn't necessary. Lifeline is someone you can trust to watch over your loved one every hour of every day. Someone you can call a friend. Because a visit to Mom's house should make you feel good, not guilty.
