

On the MOVE

bringing home the BUCK

Michelle Niescierenko keeps busy on a recent Saturday morning by straightening doughnuts, filling customers' orders and making coffee as part of duties at Buckman's Dairy in Greece.

ohn Logan made his entrance into the world of part-time employment with a big splash.

But it wasn't the kind of splash that got him on the good side of management at Hornell Country Club.

Seems John got a little too enthusiastic while cleaning in the country club restaurant's kitchen. Combining an impromptu dance with an occasional squirt of cleaning fluid, John was turning into a regular whirling dervish on the cleaning circuit.

Until he spun around and unleashed a blast of liquid straight into the face of the head chef.

"He wasn't too pleased," recalled John, a 16-year-old parishioner at St. Ann's Church in Hornell.

Somehow, though, John overcame this early catastrophe to earn a promotion from dishwasher to busboy. So instead of cleaning dirty plates, he now deposits them for others to scrub.

"I'm just a lowly busboy.

I'm getting there, though," he joked.

Michelle Niescierenko, 15, a parishioner at St. John the Evangelist Church in Greece, is another veteran of mishaps in the food industry. Coming off a recent shift from her job serving doughnuts at Buckman's Dairy, Michelle noted that her clothing was caked with confectioner's sugar after a morning of transferring doughnuts from metal racks into boxes and bags.

Not only that, she said, but that same morning, "Somebody dropped a peanut fry cake on my head."

Then there was the time Michelle bravely attempted to make her first milk shake — but had a little trouble getting used to the electronic mixer.

"It got a little messy," she recalled.

Luckily, Michelle has since displayed enough coordination to be entrusted with preparing Buckman's famous "Kitchen Sink." The colossal dessert consists of eight scoops of ice cream, two bananas, whipped cream, cherries, nuts, strawberry and pineapple sauce, and hot
