

'Faith and Reason' presents an irony

Pope John Paul II has recently issued a 150-page encyclical on faith and reason, said to have been more than a dozen years in preparation. A philosopher by academic training, the pope makes an appeal for the restoration of the central place of reason in philosophy, theology, and other intellectual disciplines.

However, for anyone versed in traditional Catholic theology, and particularly in the teaching of the First Vatican Council (1869-1870), the encyclical's main theme is a familiar one. The pope reaffirms the teaching of Vatican I that faith and reason are not mutually opposed; they complement one another in the work of understanding the truths of divine revelation.

Like the pope, the council had warned against two extreme views of the relationship between faith and reason. The one, Rationalism, so exaggerates the role and capacity of reason in the understanding of divine revelation that it effectively denies the reality of faith itself. What cannot be understood and verified by reason alone is not worthy of belief.

But the council also condemned Rationalism's opposite number, Fideism, which so exaggerates the role and capacity of faith that it effectively denies any role for reason in the understanding of divine revelation. Faith, therefore, is reduced to "blind" faith or, on the human level, to a form of credulity.

essays in theology

By FATHER RICHARD P. MCBRIEN

"Faith and reason can never oppose one another," Vatican I's Dogmatic Constitution on the Catholic Faith declared. "They mutually aid each other, because right reason demonstrates the foundations of faith, and, illumined by faith's light, it cultivates the science of things divine; while faith liberates and preserves reason from errors, and furnishes it with manifold knowledge."

Father Theodore Hesburgh, CSC, the president emeritus of the University of Notre Dame, put it more simply. A cover story on Catholic higher education in the Feb. 9, 1962, issue of Time magazine began with the familiar quote from George Bernard Shaw: "A Catholic university is a contradiction in terms." In response, Father Hesburgh pointed out that there can be "no conflict between science and theology except where there is bad science or bad theology."

Significantly, Father Hesburgh conceded the possibility of bad theology as well as bad science. Apparent or real conflicts cannot always be blamed on science. When science and theology are opposed, it may be that science is right and theology is wrong.

Since theology is employed not only by theologians but by the official teachers of the church, the principle applies to the pronouncements of the church's magisterium as well as to the writings of its theologians.

Thus, in the critical and highly complex area of medical ethics, for example, it is possible that some of the church's official teachings may insufficiently reflect the findings of modern medical science. It is not that these scientific findings are unavailable to the church's theologians. The problem is that, in the area of medical and bio-ethics especially, the official teachers sometimes rely upon only one school of theology and moral philosophy — a school that seems less conversant with, and sympathetic toward, modern medical science.

The easiest and least controversial example of all is the church's condemnation of Galileo for insisting that the earth revolves around the sun rather than vice versa. Soon after his accession to the Chair of Peter, John Paul II himself officially acknowledged the magisterium's error in the matter, albeit 3½ centuries late.

It should be noted that copies of the recent encyclical, "Faith and Reason," were (once again) distributed in advance to Vatican favorites — those who could be relied upon to offer positive commentaries for the media on the very day of the document's release. Op-ed pieces in the New York Times and Wall Street Journal, and excerpts of press interviews with selected philosophers and theologians, offer cases in point.

Those interpretations focused particularly on the encyclical's celebration of reason and its criticism of those who have allegedly abandoned its use even in the understanding of divine revelation and faith.

The irony is that this pontificate has discouraged the use of scientific reason by theologians and ethicists when their scholarly findings have raised questions about the validity of certain assumptions on the magisterium's part.

Might the encyclical, therefore, have been more accurately entitled, "Faith, Reason, and Authority," with the implicit understanding that the greatest of these is authority?

It is, at the very least, a mixed message to send to the church's scholarly community, namely, to embrace reason in the work of philosophy, theology, and other sciences, but also to avoid, at the risk of a "just penalty," any conclusions that may be at apparent or real variance with the magisterium's own view of the truth.

•••

Father McBrien is a professor of theology at the University of Notre Dame.

Help others achieve the dignity that comes with self-reliance.

Work of Human Hands is a program of Catholic Relief Services, in partnership with SERRV International, through which parish and school communities can help impoverished Third World brothers and sisters support their families. Sale of Work of Human Hands handcrafted gift items benefits:

- Crafts people in developing nations - receive 80% for their labor;
- Parish and school groups - keep 10% of net sales;
- Diocesan and Global hunger programs - also receive 10%

There is no risk or cost to participating groups - items are on consignment. These international craft items can enhance holiday bazaars, school fairs, parish festivals, soup suppers, and more!

St. Ann's (Hornell) Youth Ministry/Social Ministry
Sale Nov. 21 • 8:30 am - 3 pm • Canisteo Middle School

Find out more: call 1-800-685-7572 for a brochure and/or catalog.

Catholic Relief Services

The official overseas relief and development agency of the U.S. Catholic community, offering assistance regardless of religious or ethnic background.

Catholic Relief Services • West Fayette St. • Baltimore, Maryland 21202-3443

1999 Holy Cross Lucky Daily Number Calendars Are Here!

Cost: $30/Calendar • Pays: $30 Daily

3 Grand Prize Days in 1999:
 $250 on June 13th (St. Anthony's Day)
 $250 on Nov. 25th (Thanksgiving)
 $1,000 on Sept. 14th (Feast of the Holy Cross)

3 Monthly Special Days:
 $50 on the 8th
 $100 on the 18th
 $150 on the 28th

Order Yours NOW!

Great for Christmas and Birthdays!

364 Chances to Win! Play the Holy Cross Lucky Daily Number Calendar for the Whole Year. Your $30 will help offset the cost of the Parish Budget along with helping to educate the young men and women of Holy Cross School. Daily Winners from the New York State Daily Lottery Numbers (3 digits, straight only)

Complete, tear off and return with payment.

Purchaser: _____ Receiver: (Complete if purchasing for a gift) _____
 Name _____ Name _____
 Address _____ Address _____
 City _____ State _____ Zip Code _____ City _____ State _____ Zip Code _____
 Daytime Phone # _____ Mail To: Purchaser Receiver _____ Signature _____ Expiration Date _____

Please make checks payable to Holy Cross Church. And return to: Holy Cross Church/Lucky Calendar • 4492 Lake Ave. • Rochester, NY 14612