

File photo

Bishop Hogan greets a former teacher from his school days, Sister Lucinda Gilmartin, SSJ, at St. Joseph's Convent Infirmary, Sept. 11, 1972.

File photo

Father George Wiant with Bishop Hogan.

even the role of priesthood," he said. "A lot of people are much opposed to that."

On church today

One outgrowth of the priest shortage — the eventual clustering of parishes — did not surprise Bishop Hogan.

"We didn't realize, but sometimes it takes a real crisis to make this happen. I think people are gradually getting educated to the fact we were living in days of luxuries with all these parishes," he commented in May.

"A lot of parishes were put together with a limited view of church," he said. It was understandable that ethnic parishes were founded by immigrants, he noted. "But the time comes when it's not needed. ... and we don't go by horse and buggy anymore.

"It really struck me that we had more churches than we needed to take care of our people. But people are hanging on ... to attract people to 'my' parish — a pronoun we are trying, ought, to destroy.

"So the concept is broadening people to what church is all about. I think they are realizing how desperate we are. ... We are and they know it," he remarked.

Retirement

Bishop Hogan resigned Nov. 28, 1978, nine years to the day from his ordination as bishop. He had suffered from emphysema and pneumonia, from illness aggravated by stress.

"Certain things were coming that I knew I wasn't capable of handling," he told the Courier recently. "Especially the closing of the seminary. That was on the horizon. It was much easier for an outsider like Bishop Clark who had been in this diocese only two years as a student. ... I knew I didn't have the heart to close my old seminary. And the doctors advised there were signs of health deteriorating because of pressures on me. They wrote out letters, documents which I published in the Courier, lest there be any talk, so there was no mystery."

File photo

Bishop Hogan made a hit with children across the diocese.

His longtime friend Father James Marvin said that continued resistance to his initiatives was hard on the bishop. "It hurt him," he said. "Little by little it tore him down. He retired too early."

A few Rochester priests, both young and old, considered Vatican II a "terrible thing that happened." Father Marvin said. "It's no secret some went to Rome and turned (Bishop Hogan) in for what they thought he did wrong. He had to answer Rome. He had to write a response back. He got help from some good bishops also being attacked by these crazy people. It was sent to Rome. They were satisfied."

Father Marvin chaired the Selection of Bishops Committee set up at the request of Bishop Hogan and approved by the Diocesan Pastoral Council. The committee was charged with assessing diocesan needs and the qualities Bishop Hogan's successor would need to have, the priest noted, adding that it conducted listening sessions and sent questionnaires throughout the diocese.

"We really don't know what happened in Rome," Father Marvin said of Vatican reaction to his committee's report. But Bishop Matthew H. Clark "turned out to be the person we were looking for. That's how the Holy Spirit and Providence works."

When Bishop Clark was installed, Bishop Hogan noted, "I thanked publicly the apostolic delegate, and said send my word to the Holy Father to thank him for instant health. ... It was like having a tremendous burden taken from my shoulders."

He called a group of black Catholics together. He felt the needs of black Catholics were not being met. We sort of gave the blueprint when other (black ministry) offices were formed in other dioceses. It was courageous to stand up for what was just and for what he felt was right for the Christian Church.
He was an angel. I always remember his warm smile and sense of humor.

→ Jean Pryor, outreach/evangelization coordinator for St. Anthony of Padua Parish, Rochester, and a founder of the Diocesan Office of Black Ministry

I'd see him quite frequently. Every time, he always would say to me, "I'm so glad I did what I did," because he saw what the deacons were doing in the parishes.

Deacon Stan Douglas of St.
 Rita's Parish, Webster, on the founding of the permanent diaconate program

You are Cordially Invited to The First in a Series of Winemaker Dinners
Presented by The Restaurant at The Renaissance

An Olympic Salute featuring the Wines and Cuisine of Australia

Monday September 11 2000 at 6:30 pm 2500 East Avenue Rochester New York

A Guest Speaker will discuss the Wines and our Chef will provide commentary on the Cuisine. The Renaissance Winemaker Dinner is a Five Course Meal paired with Four Wines, a Sparkling Wine, and is $50 per person

All taxes and gratuities are included.

Attendance is by Reservation Only and must be purchased in advance
Seating is limited please RSVP today. 383.8170

A Tyler Jay (

Look for the Health Care issue on September 21