

Teens march for life

Thousands of pro-life marchers from all over the United States head toward the Supreme Court building in Washington, D.C., Jan. 22 in protest of the Roe vs. Wade decision of 1973.

(From left) Andy Logue, 16, a Geneva High School student, with DeSales students Lyndsey Hilberer, 17, chaperone Trish Deane and her daughter, Meaghan, 17, walk by the Capitol on their way to Sen. Hillary Clinton's office. The students and chaperones lobbied at the offices of several senators and representatives.

DeSales student Kateri Spellecky, 14, fills out a card at the office of Rep. James T. Walsh.

PHOTOS
BY ANDREA
DIXON

DeSales student Kristin Osterhout, 14, walks in the march.

At 10:30 p.m. Jan. 21, a busload of students from St. Michael's School in Newark and DeSales High School in Geneva, with parents and teachers, departed for Washington, D.C., for the annual March for Life. The bus was one of a few from the diocese. It arrived at 5 a.m. at St. Peter's Church, in southeast Washington, where volunteers were ready with coffee and doughnuts. At 7 a.m., the group joined others for a "Mass of Holy Innocence." The St. Michael's children then went on a tour of the city, while the teens and adults visited congressional offices to lobby against abortion. At noon, the group joined the March for Life. Held on the anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision, the march began at the Washington Monument and culminated at the Supreme Court.