Workmaster noted. For example, some books contain Scriptural readings that show Jesus' journey to the cross from the point of view of his mother, Mary, or the women of the Gospels. In Syracuse, she noted, those involved in jail ministry and peace activities do an outdoors stations. They travel to various places in the city such as the jail and courthouse, using the buildings as stations "all with an eye toward prayer that has to do with peace, social justice, those kinds of things," she said.

Praying Stations of the Cross is important, Workmaster said, because Jesus suffered for us, and in this world people are suffering still.

"The reflection we do during stations allows us to reflect on all this suffering and take it to God and ask for peace, justice and that the real message of the Gospel be heard," she said.
