

Ending 'crisis' in a crisis pregnancy

Rob Cullivan/Catholic Courier

Tori Cooney, 18 months old, presented her visitor with a sock and a teddy bear.

Her mother, Marie A. Cooney, is a divorced mother of two other children. She noted that Tori's addition to her family was "unplanned." When she found herself pregnant, the Irondequoit resident rejected the idea of abortion, however.

"I knew it was an option, but it didn't seem a morally correct option," she said.

But she also realized she needed support. So she turned to Birthright, a crisis-pregnancy agency that operates throughout the Diocese of Rochester. Cooney also said she was aided by Women's Care Center (formerly Problem Pregnancy Help Center) in Rochester, as well as Elizabeth Ministry of St. Louis Parish in Pittsford.

As Cooney learned, there are many services throughout the diocese for women in crisis-pregnancy situations. Services are available, for example, through diocesan Catholic Charities. And such ministries as diocesan Hispanic Migrant Ministry have assisted pregnant women as well.

Meanwhile, a number of parishes noted that they have supported mothers and mothers to be with material and spiritual aid. Dozens of parishes, clusters, organizations, campus ministries and pastoral-planning groups have signed the diocesan "Pledge For Life," which commits them to serve people struggling with crisis-pregnancy situa-
